debating societies. Baxter's store was what is called a general store—so called, presumedly, because it is generally out of what you want. Baxter protessed to keep everything needful, from belt-cotton down to patent clothes-pins and from winter-green kz nges up to real ostrich fea-oner fans. Baxter himself was a typi-cal Yankee—tall, hulking, lantern-jawed, and garrulous. He had nis clothes made at home and bis wife always cat, bis hair. He was so thrifty that if he had been wrecked on a desert island he would nave swam ashore in two weeks with andertaker. His confurdence wuz not misplaced. Hampshire. I guess she wuz, perhap; tue smartest woman that ever lived; somehow or other wimmin nowadays haven't got the faculty she had—you don't got no such doughnuts and pies nowadays that you used to get when my mother was livin'. Waai, now, it's funny I can't lay my hands on that smoked sah-mon Likely as not that boy Reuben hez hid it away somewhere. Never did see such a shiftless boy in all my born days; don't do no good to talk to hin, —he keeps right on with his J m Cr. w business juat the same. Miss Perkins —one of the Perkins sisters — lives dewn next to the Hobertplace—wuzin here t'other day an' ordered an ounce uv cloves to take to choir meetin'; darhed if that fool boy didn't do up a uv cloves to take to choir meetin'; darhed if that fool boy didn't do up a p.per uv tacks i'r her. That evenin' bout 9 o'check Lem Higgins, the bass singer, come runnin' dow a the road i'r Dock Smith. 'Sakes alive, Lem,' sez the Dock, 'what alls you?' There ain't nochin' the matter with me,' sez Lem, 'but M'ss Perkins is havin' fits up, to meetin' house.' 'Jest watt si minnit, till I get my medicine chest,' says the Dock. 'We don't want no medicine,' st z Lem. 'Ef we're goin' to save her life all we need is perfeshional skill an' a tack hammer.'
