want to tell you a story."

There is a boy of Persian ancestry and he is still poor. These the children knew. They had heard of the boy.
That was not the story, but it was not far from it. The teacher's attention was attracted by the boy's appearance. After the story he remembered the boy's name. The boy's name was not the name of the boy, but the name of the boy's father. The to be hatched from honey bees, and the honey bees, in turn, lay their eggs in the waxen cells where, when hatched, it is possible to shoot in the darkness with the stinging killer and the honey bees.

After the value of the fairy tale has been proved in actual work, there is no reason why the child, delighted and fascinated by the story, should not be able to find the beautiful knowledge he has been seeking. Indeed, if the fact can be proved that the fairy tale is a means of education and the preliminary training of a human being with very few pains and expenditure, it is not surprising that the fairy tale will continue to be read by the young and the old.

While children play in the world, they can so delightfully experience the story of the fairy tale that they will not be able to get away from it. The fairy tale is a uniquely good means for the education of a child's mind. The knowledge that the child gains from the fairy tale is not only a means of education, but is also a means of self-education, for all about him is influencing and shaping his fate. The knowledge and memory and dream of the child are the basis of his life. The child's imagination, and the child's dreams, are the basis of his education. The child's imagination, and the child's dreams, are the basis of his education. The child's imagination, and the child's dreams, are the basis of his education.
