EXPANDING TIRES.

There are many instances in various parts of the world where the whole or a portion of a stream suddenly disappears from sight, and in some cases the place of its disappearance is unknown, or at best a matter of conjecture.

It is a common experiment where the waters of a river make a plunge and disappear at a short distance, to throw a stick into the upper waters and note its appearance upon the surface of the lower.

But the Esquimaux and Mining Journal describes a different practice. It has been supposed that a portion of the water of the upper end of the Danube went to feed the river Aach, an affluent of the Danube.

Some time since a powerful green color was found in the water of the Aach, and it was supposed that a portion of the water of the upper end of the Danube went to feed the river Aach, an affluent of the Danube.
