WASHINGTON, D. C., April 29.—Citizen J. S. Coxey, commander-in-chief of the good roads army of the common-weal, standing on his rickety wagon in the center of Brightwood Driving park, waving aloft his alpine hat to one of the most cosmopolitan and extensive audiences ever gathered in Washington, announced this afternoon that the greatest march of the nineteenth century had been accomplished.

Three hundred and fifty miserably-dressed, woe-begone, grumbling, out-at-the-elbows and run-down-at-the-heel specimens of humanity marched into the park, led by a wheezing apology for a band, pitched tents and stretched themselves in the sun. Thousands from the city turned out to make a holiday of it and inspect the curious aggregation.

The men who had marched were the most unique and inexplicable aggregation ever brought together. Some of them were at work at the tents and wagons. Others were curled up on the damp ground, munching great chunks of bread, and many were stretched sleeping in the sun, with their heads pillowed on rolled-up overcoats.

LANSING, Mich., May 1.—A committee of citizens from Iron Mountain, headed by Mayor Crowell, have waited on Governor Rich and laid before him the condition of the destitute miners of that place. It was explained that five hundred families are now receiving aid and the number is daily increasing, while both city and county treasuries are empty and there is absolutely no prospect of relief in the way of resumption of operations at the mines. Should the present conditions continue through the summer and winter, fully $100,000 will be required to meet the needs of the people. Governor Rich explained that under the constitution the legislature, even if convened in extra session at vast expense, could appropriate only $50,000, and as other sections would doubtless ask for aid if money was to be appropriated, the amount apportioned to the mining regions would not be of material aid. At the suggestion of the governor, the delegation went to Detroit to consult with the citizens relief committee appointed by him last winter and with whom he had agreed not to call an extra legislative session until such committee had declared its inability to meet the wants.
