Joseph Lawdor, of Bridgeport, Connecticut, was a seafaring man until recently. On his last voyage the vessel was wrecked and the crew all perished except himself. For days he drifted around on the hull of the bark without a bite to eat. Quite a number of mice were quartered in the hold. These would frequently venture out and nibble at his feet. At last he became so hungry that he began butchering and eating them. Upon raw mouse, and that alone, he subsisted until a sailing vessel picked him up.

The Crown Prince Rudolph, of Aus_ tria, has undertaken an exhaustive work on Australa-Hungary. It is to be an immense cyclopædia of useful knowledge, It will deal with antiquitics, history, literature, language, art, science, and a hundred other subjects. How many volumes it may extend to nobody has yet stated, nor is it at all likely that a corps of specialists, each working out a theory of his own for the satisfaction of a Royal editor, will be found to err much on the side of brevity. One of the questions to be treated at length is discribed in the programme as "The Mutual Influence of the various parts of the Empire upon each other," and there are also to be extended essays on the "Ruling House," "The Monarchy Within and Without," and "The Position of Austria-Hungary as a European Power,"

I am extremely glad to see the vari-ous articles which have lately appeared ous articles which have lately appeared in the Index on the Mormon question. It is one of the most important and most threatening problems in our poli-tical life. Agitation on the subject is necessary, but still more desirable is information. There is a great deal of self-interest and political expediency and religious bigotry mixed with the righteous disapproval of Mormon in-stitutions. I think the liberal thinkers of America are especially bound to consider this question, because, being fettered by neither political nor eccles-instical ties, they ought to be able to do so without heat and solely in the intime it had become Romanized, paganized and apostate. Marriage has been from time immemorial a relation regulated by ecclesiastical rules. Matrimony is a matter of religion. Its debasement to a mere civil contract is a modern custom, and one that has been prolific of evil. The Constitution of the United States forbids interference with the free exercise of religion. Therefore religious mardo so without heat and solely in the inriages are beyond the purview of the National Government. ANSWERS TO "QUESTIONS ON THE MORMON PROBLEM."

The educational question in Utah will never be udderstood from the statements of anti-"Mormons," religious or otherwise. The University of Deseret gives "an impartial, liberal education," and is not devoted in whole or in part to the teachings of any sect or denomination.

There were wooden logs laid down for a distance of some three hundred yards leading to the buildings, at the beginning of which, under cover, was a pump operated by a huge shaft, to the end of which was attached a box or bucket holding about half a barrel. Into this bucket a stream or spring was conducted from further up the hill. When the bucket was filled its weight would force the shaft down, and strrking a platform the bucket
