THE WORLD'S FAIR.

It is a little more than half a year past the four hundredth anniversary of the highway of time since the famed Genoese navigator disembarked at that halcyon and three upon the gates of a new world. Previous to that the Azores were the limit of voyaging westward and the ships had gone no further south than to round the great projection into the Atlantic from the African coast. With all this and the magnitude of the capacity of sailing craft at that time combined, together with the primitive and inefficient scientific apparatus available, the voyage across the waste of waters was the plunging into the depths of space in quest of a new star. It was rendered all the more irksome, difficult and questionable by reason of everything resting on faith in one man, through whose persistence and the providential interventions which came, ships were obtained and manned, followed by a series of reverses and discouragements, each tending to diminish the confidence so long in forming and to increase the reluctance then so prevalent to rendering aid. It was a herculean task to obtain anything for the masses were ignorant and poor, the others were haughty and self-satisfied. Lisbon was the only scientific society and Portugal would do nothing. How many men in this day of fastships, perfected instruments, willing crews, and scientific and governments ready to aid, presuming there to be an undiscovered continent in some unknown and distant quarter, could be found that, in the face of such a rebuff, discouragement at every turn, poverty almost beyond expression and the first attempt at which everything seemed to hang, providing a failure, would not have abandoned the enterprise in despair and let the world's great conception perish where it was born? It is not plain that where a superhuman and apparently impossible task is to be performed, there arises at the proper time and in the proper place the proper man to do it—without whom it could not or would not be done at all.

Christopher Columbus was an inspired man; he had a work to perform and the melting array of all barriers created by unyielding nature and unfriendly man between him and it must have been plain to him when petitioning courts and begging for bread as when with his mortal vision he beheld it. Little by little incredulity gave way to thinking and reasoning, and eventually behold upon the broad, billowy breast of the Atlantic a little fleet with a gallant crew bidding adieu to the Old World and headed for one new where, no one but Columbus, and he could not tell.

That was the beginning of the grandest consummation by man relating to old Mother Earth. Today, amid all the pomp, pride and circumstance which the cultivated mind could devise or the trained hand execute, the pinpoints of that consummation was reached and crowned. In the presence of vast multitudes from beyond the seas and from all parts of Columbia, representing every clime from the equator to the pole, every condition from the plow to the peasant, every form of worship from the intelligent and devout follower in the footsteps of the Master down to and including the worshiper of graven images or the sun, every occupation in life and well nigh every product of every land—the greatest and grandest exposition of which history gives us any account was opened, the gates of the White City were thrown ajar, the pendent mechanism was set in motion, the countless objects of interest and curiosity and mechanism and art were brought into view.

It was in every way fitting that the chief magistrate of the United States should be assisted in the work of opening the Fair by a liberal descendant of the man through whose misadventure not only the show but the nation itself were made possible. As nearly as could be the discovery and the fruits thereof were brought face to face. The intervening incidents by which the two are connected are matters of record and familiar to most civilized people in both hemispheres; but nothing could give such vividness and vitality to the epochs of the immediate past as the spectacle of the discoverer's descendant mingling freely with the newer race through into being through the discovery. And how appropriate, how poetic it is that one of the grandest objects of the fair, and them at the Fair is a consummation and a gateway supplied structure by and by. But for the work and influence of a woman, this ancestor could not have sailed, and had he not sailed there would be no assembled thousands admiring the wonderful and the beautiful in Chicago today.

The sincere hope that should find judgment in the breast of every citizen is that an unfavorable elements may prevail and nothing superstitious occur to curtail in the slightest degree the general effect of the scene or the enjoyment of those who visit it; that all may be favorable and each particular feature be at its best. It is no less a patriotic than a comic and scientific exhibition and so such we take pride and pleasure in it whether present or absent. Let the realm go forth from far and wide—All hail and every success in the World's Columbian Exposition!

NOW LET SOMETHING BE DONE.

The two or three officials to whom the City Council has delegated full authority in the matter of guarding against and controlling the high water, are men who ought to be qualified by observation and experience for the responsible duty imposed. We are informed, however, that one of them is so abnormally deficient in both these qualifications as to express the following opinion: "All this here talk about high water and damage to property is rot; there hasn't no danger."

Of course this man, if he has been correctly quoted, will do nothing toward meeting the danger, and is an unwilling and pernicious sort of way. One of his associates is reported as being of much the same temper. This would leave the whole active part of the responsibility upon the shoulders of one man, which is exactly the best thing under the circumstances, provided that one man be the right one. The News has great hopes of Engineer Doremus; it believes he is neither indifferent to nor ignorant of the danger, and that therefore it is prepared to hold up his hands in the exercise of the powers conferred by the recent action of the Council; and it hopes he will yield his judgment to no friendship not to be deterred from the line of his duty by no fear, in ordering the useful work done, the silly damns torn out, the weak places made firm, and a system of sense and effectiveness restored in place of the editorial collection of blunders of which there has recently been so impressive a display.

PERSUADING IN ERROR.

The News is advised by its Liberal antagonist that its (the News) language criticizing the other because of its position on certain works of the Oregon congress is the language of a "Whiff," that it is "rot" and so on. The style of opinion usually accredited to the woman spoken of is what is commonly known as billingsgate—that is, vulgar, profane and rapid vehemence. The writers on this paper lay no claim to superiority in the matter of word-choice, nor does any of them consider himself a literary genius; but each and every one does lay claim—and can establish the claim whenever it is questioned—to being somewhat above and beyond the kind of thing spoken of.

As to anything we have printed being "rot," that, of course, is a matter of opinion. If the "rot" to present reasons why certain Congressmen, highly respected in most cases and altogether respectable in every case, should be informed regarding the Utah situation, what must it be to permit in a statement, made without the slightest showing other than assertion, that they not only do not know thereof, but insinuate that they are corrupt and assert that they are working in the interest of the Church? Is there any term more expressive of detest than the elegant one so freely resorted to by our contemporary by which that kind of thing can be fitly described?

A quotation from the News of last October is brought into requisition presumably to show how we have changed our tactics—that the salt have been trimmed to catch another breeze. This is laughable, or would be if it were not so grotesque or so impudent. A liberal alteration and thereby so amiable. There is not a word in that extract that we do not stand by today, nor has there been anything in the intervening time appearing in these columns at all at variance with it. Certainly we would welcome statehood, and certainly again we are not going to beg for it nor break our hearts if it never comes. That is about the burden of anything that has been said on that subject.

The News repeats that the Church search has not yet taken any part in influencing or causing to be influenced any man or combination of men for or against the admission of Utah. Whoever gives birth to more or less than a lying birth a literary man—that is a statement that is a good deal worse than "rot."

IMPATIENCE REGARDING HAWAII.

Some of the papers are impatient because the state secrets regarding Hawaii are not divulged. "Mr. Cleveland should take the people into his confidence," exclaims one of them, while others exclaim that President Cleveland is worthy of record and familiar to most civilized people in both hemispheres; but nothing could give such vividness and vitality to the epochs of the immediate past as the spectacle of the discoverer's descendant mingling freely with the newer race through into being through the discovery. And how appropriate, how poetic it is that one of the grandest objects of the fair, and them at the Fair is a consummation and a gateway supplied structure by and by. But for the work and influence of a woman, this ancestor could not have sailed, and had he not sailed there would be no assembled thousands admiring the wonderful and the beautiful in Chicago today.

THE LIBERTY BELL.

In Troy, New York, this month will be cast an interesting piece of national "furniture," it being the Columbia Liberty Bell. It will be the most complete thing of the kind or perhaps of any kind ever constructed. Its composition will be gold without number, each reaching some patriotic or stirring scene or time of interest connected with the history of the country. It is very rarely that anything that is really new is at the same time altogether old—that is, outside the field occupied by the modern playwright and the maker of patches generally; but such will be this great bell.

The people at large have been invited to contribute to the bell and we are advised that they have responded munificently, sending in gold and silver coins, old swords and other weapons that saw their service in battles long ago; all were originated in colonial times; metal from famous wars and relics of the revolution, the war of 1812, the Mexican war and the war of the rebellion. The contributors are said to be numbered by the thousands. Some are soldiers, some are "old men and women who have known, in bitterness of deepest sorrow, the price of liberty." All the contributions will be placed in the furnace, melted and poured into the mold in which the bell is to take form. "When it is in diaphanous form take up the last chord of the Philadelphia Liberty bell, and begin anew the work of proclaiming 'liberty throughout the land and unto all the inhabitants thereof.' It will have by way of inscription and dedication, 'Glory to God in the highest; peace on earth, good will to men.'"

It is the intention to have the bell taken all around the country and rung in the principal cities, after which it may be sent on a voyage around the globe. It will receive a fitting and cordial reception when it reaches Salt Lake City.

THE CHAMPION OF THE WORLD.

WE ARE advised that the Grand Duke Alexander, who is to be the representative of the Russian Imperial family at Chicago and who is to be one of the illustrious guests or, in other words, a young fellow of 27 years, who was born in Tiflis in the Caucasus and is a younger son of the only one of the princes of the court with whom the latter has remained on good terms. The fact that he represents a despotic and a tyrannical rule would seem to be a disadvantage to him. As a guest he will be treated as well as the right man who is not afflicted with a pedigree.

WE ALL know how March and April came to, how they acted when they got in, and how they went out. And now May has opened its display. Well, there is consolation in the thought that the weather cannot be any worse than it has been; and there is a fair chance that as we get on toward June we may have a relief of spring.

HERE is a stanza written by William Ewers (founder of the Salt Lake City Herald) in his earlier days: "We are and the world and the crowd of a home and a right, and never shall we part our love in friendship in the balance. Which only goes to show that great men are not great in all respects."
