Short Time Movement Postponed.

FALL RIVER, Mass., 17.—Manufacturers of the Board of Trade have indefinitely postponed the project of running on short time, the large majority being confident of their ability to carry cloths till the market improves.

Secretary Sherman on the Questions of the Day.

CHICAGO, 17.—The following is a summary of an address, on the political and financial condition of the country, delivered by Hon. John Sherman, Secretary of the Treasury, at a public reception given at his home in Mansfield, Ohio, to-night:

He referred at first to the settlement of the southern difficulties, plainly showing the situation when Hayes was inaugurated, and the necessity for the action taken. The President found thirty-six States in the Union. In two States only were contests as to who was governor. Both contests had existed from January to March, 1877, while Grant was President. As to South Carolina, the speaker said that strongly as he desired the success of Governor Chamberlain, the President had not the shadow of a right to interpose the power of the army in this contest, and his attempt to do so would have been rash and abortive, as well as without legal right.

The case of Louisiana was far more difficult. The local returning officers of that State had, after a full examination, certified to the election of a legislature showing a republican majority in both houses. The returning officers had the legal right to pass upon and certify in the first instance who were elected members of the legislature, and they were justified in excluding the bulldozed parishes; but it was equally clear that their return was not conclusive upon the members elected, and that each house had the constitutional right to pass upon the returns and elections of its members and set aside the action of the returning board.

The speaker then related the efforts to secure a peaceful solution through legislative action, and concluded this portion of his speech in these words:

"No doubt the result in Louisiana caused disappointment to many republicans throughout the United States, who deeply sympathized with their brethren in that State. I did and do share in that feeling, and yet I feel and know that every step taken by President Hayes was right, in strict accordance with his constitutional duty, and from the highest motives of patriotism. Some are foolish enough to talk of abandoning the colored people and their constitutional rights. President Hayes, from his early manhood, had been an anti-slavery man. His life was imperilled on many battle fields in the great cause of liberty."

Another question of administration which has received the prompt attention of President Hayes is the standing promise of both political parties for the last fifty years to secure civil service reform, without defining what was meant by this phrase; but old abuses grew and new abuses were devised, by which the civil service of government was made an agency to control the action of parties and influence the rising or falling fortunes of politicians, while the public service was a secondary consideration. Upon this subject the President had clear views, and has not hesitated against the opposition of many of his own party to enter upon a reform of these abuses. It was believed that the Custom House in New York, the great agency for the collection of duties on imported goods, was especially open to these abuses, and that the public interests were sacrificed to the advancement of the political and pecuniary interests of individuals. The President directed that throughout the investigation should be made by independent men of both parties, and aimed not at individuals, but at the system itself. The President has not and never did object to the most active men being appointed to and aspiring for office. He would naturally select from among the most active men in private those who are to hold public offices, and other things being equal would select out of his own party rather than out of the adverse party. At all events, that is my own view.

In the way of administrative reform, the expenses of the government in many branches have been greatly reduced, mainly in the treasury department, which from the magnitude of its operations employs about 12,000 persons. The government has saved a large amount by the great reduction made in its various departments.

On the question of specie payments the speaker said, "I feel confident in saying to you to-day that if undisturbed, with or without a change of the law, every dollar of the United States notes will, before the time fixed for resumption, buy as much as an equal amount either in gold or silver."

In regard to the contest between capital and labor, I would say the depression of business caused by the panic of 1873 has led to such competition between the great railroad lines that rates for freight and passengers have been reduced below the actual cost of business; the result has been that the wages of employes have been reduced in some cases to an amount barely sufficient to pay for the necessaries of life. The laborer is worthy of his hire, and should always receive enough to maintain his family in decency and comfort, but we cannot secure this blessing by intimidating capital, burning houses, preventing other people from laboring, or by any violence or crime. My hope is that Congress will pass laws to establish and limit maximum rates of freight, so that the production of a farmer may not be in danger of confiscation by exorbitant rates; that it will limit and restrain the cutting and reduction of freights, so as to destroy the ability of railroad companies to pay fair prices for honest labor, and to prevent the companies from making paupers of men who perform essential functions in commerce. And now, fellow citizens, in conclusion, allow me to express my heartfelt thanks for the courtesy and kindness you always have shown to me, not only during this short visit, but in all the time I have lived among you.

"Suppose we pass a law," said a severe father to his daughters, "that no girl eighteen years old who can't cook a good meal shall get married till she learns how to do it." "Why, then, we'd all get married at seventeen," responded the girls in sweet chorus.
