Since I last saw you, I have visited the scenes of my childhood, and the place of my birth, after an alwance of about forty years. My ideas of right and wrong were formed there; my associations with the people, up to iffeen years of age, were such as to give deep and atrong impressions of the principles by which they were governed. I cannot say their means. In visiting the office of the town clerk, I as a more than a generation. I under the record kept by my great the statisticians to estimate that the the record kept by my great the statisticians to estimate that the the record kept by my great the statisticians to estimate that the the record kept by my great the statisticians to estimate that the the record kept by my great the statisticians to estimate that the the record kept by my great the statisticians to estimate that the the record kept by my great the statisticians to estimate that the the record kept by my great the statisticians to estimate that the the record kept by my great the statisticians to estimate that the record kept by my great the statisticians to estimate that the record kept by my great the statisticians to estimate that the record kept by my great the statisticians to estimate that the record kept by my great the statisticians to estimate that the record kept by my great the statisticians to estimate that the record kept by my great the statisticians to estimate that the record kept by my great the statisticians to estimate that the record kept by my great the statisticians to estimate that the record kept by my great the statisticians to estimate that the the record kept by my great the the statisticians to estimate that the head represente the town in the the tage as guestion in relation to the statisticians to estimate that the head represente the town in the tage as guestion in relation to the statisticians to estimate that the head represente the town in the tage as the statisticians to estimate that the head represente the town in the tage as the statisticians to estimate that I went into my native town after forty years' absence, and inquired for those who were the business men in my boyhood, for the magistrates, ministers, merchants, farmers and mechanics with whom I was farmers and mechanics with whom I was acquainted then. Where were they? Nearly all dead, a very few of the old faces, like manient oaks, remain. On my father's farm there was a beautiful grove of maple-some there was a beautiful grove of maple-some two hundred trees, standing when I was there before, with no other timber among them, the ground sown with white clo-there bad a son Samuel, and them the ground sown with white clothem, the ground sown with white clo-ver—it was one of the most beautiful lawns I ever saw when I left it. I drove up be-fore the house in which I was born, and said to the man who was residing there, "Is that grove standing? "Not a maple tree on the farm," was the reply. "Not a single one?" said I. "No," said he, "not s maple on the farm." I had not even the curiosity to drive across the farm, for in my mind that grove was the feature of all others, it was the place of my dreams. Many of you know that in 1853 we had difficulty with the Indians in Southern Usan. At that time I was military comkey to help them in making the necessary records to attend to the ordinances for their dead. But our faith is, brethren and sisters, that when we have exhausted all the powers within our natural reason and reach to Intimation cf, the coming trouble with the obtain a knowledge of our dead, and the indians. Now there is not a tree left. It Lord is satisfied with us, revelations will be opened to our understandings by which we will be able to trace back our genealog to the time when men were within the pai ofthe principles and laws of the price before these ordinances were changed and the everlasting covenant broken. In conversing with Mr. Zaccheus Gould and his wife, of Topsfield, over eighty years old, and Dr. Humphrey Gould, of Rowe, who were cousins of my father, fused admittance to the park as some I was enabled to pick up many very satis-factory items of information. I am also under obligation to Mr. John H. Gould, of under obligation to Mr. John H. Gould, of Topsfield, and to the lown clerk of that place—Mr. Towne, for valuable letters and papers relating to the history of our family, all of which, as they relate to the ancestry of Joseph Smith, will form an interesting page in connection with his history when it shall be published. I do not design, in conversion with I do not design, in conversing with you at the present time, to enumerate the visits I made, though they remind me of a re-mark made concerning me by my grand-father on the last day of his life. He died in his eighty-eighth year, I being then in my fourteenth year. Said he, "George A. is a rather singular boy. When he comes

Latter-day Saints, in their preaching, call on men and women to prepare to live, and they teach them how to live, be-live as he ought to, he will certainly be pre-pared to die whenever the anamona shall come. It was never a part or portion of our teaching to attempt to scare men to heaven. I went to the meeting house, or the old frame building had been replaced by another, of bricks, and it converted into a jecture room for the normal school. In

A Select FIRST LIAN REMARKS

By President GEORGE A. SMITH, Delivered in the New Tabernacle, Salt Lake City, Sunday, July 7th, 1872.

REPORTED BY DAVID W. EVANS.

THE administration of the Sacrament is an occasion which calls us, one and all, to reflection, to inquire of ourselves in relation to our course of conduct in life-whether the journey we have pursued, the paths that we are traveling are in accordance with the holy principles of that religion which has been revealed for our selvation,

We are all passing to the tomb, and we want to leave a good record, that is, one that will be pleasing to the Lord. It is not a very lofty ambition for a usen to spend his life so as to have it recorded on his tombstone that he died worth a million dollars; but if he spend his life in doing good, that will be a record that will be to his archisting honor, and will prove to him treasure in heaven.
