RENE, THE CONSCRIPT.

PART I.

"Were you ever in our part of the country, M'sieu? 'No.' Ah! it is grand and beautiful there! There, instead of this dead level, we have the mountains, and the river flashes along in a rapid current, foaming and dashing against the rocks when the snows are melting from the upper mountains. On the opposite side of the river to where we lived, was an old ruined castle, on the summit of a rounded hill. The ascent to the castle was planted with trees, and was a favorite walk. Here often in the long summer evenings, when work was over, or on our rare holidays, Toinette and I used to wander, talking about our future that was to be spent together—always together. Or we used to sit beneath the old walls overlooking the river, and were as happy as the birds that flew in and out of the ivy over our heads."

Fabre paused for awhile. Then drawing the back of his hand across his brow, and clearing his throat, he resumed:

"Just for the moment, M'sieu, it almost seemed to me as if I could hear the murmur of the river and Toinette's voice, that was as sweet as the lapse of waters, or the song of birds—at least it was so to my ears.

"When we have fixed in our own minds the way we will go in life, it seems that the good God—for our benefit no doubt—stops us, and turns our steps into a different path altogether. The time for drawing for the conscription was approaching; but it gave me no concern. I had drawn a lucky number before, and should do so again, I had no doubt. I had great faith in my luck, because all had gone so well with me hitherto.

"When the day came, Pierre and I, and the other young men of the district, assembled to draw the numbers, M'sieu, I thought the earth had given way from beneath my feet when the number I held was read out. I have no doubt my cheeks were blanched, for the sergeant whispered 'coward' as he passed me. I think when we were before Sebastopol he recalled his word.

"I was not a coward in the sense he meant. But it is no light thing to have all one's hopes and all one's efforts for nine years annihilated at a blow—brought to nothing, like the ashes of this cigar that I knock away.

"At first I had some hope that Pierre might offer to take my place; for when father was angry with him for his unsteady ways he used to talk of going for a soldier. But talking and doing are two different things, as I found. Father urged me to pay for a substitute. But a substitute was not easily to be found. It would have taken all my money—just all that I had saved.

"Toinette, too, begged me to stay; but to what end? We could not marry, if I had nothing but my daily work as a vigneron, and father and mother to keep. It might have been better to do as they wished; but what would you? We are but human, and I could not begin again.

"I determined to go. There would be the money, so that father could make his living as a carrier, and Toinette I knew would be true to me, and when I came back we should see.

"I found it the hardest to part from poor old mother. You see father being lame, and Pierre not good for much, she leaned upon me. When she hung crying round my neck, I began to wish I had let the money go and consented to remain at home. But it was too late; and we were marched away, just as you saw those poor fellows awhile ago.

"I did not like a soldier's life, my heart was not in it; it was always in our valley, among the vines and olive trees, and I longed continually for the term of service to be over. I did my duty. Time would have gone no faster for shirking that; and when our regiment was ordered to the Crimea, I caught something of the excitement, and was glad to go—glad at the prospect of change, and of active service.

"I was no great hand at letter-writing, I had not had time for much learning; but I managed to write home to tell them I was going, and to bid them keep up their hearts.

"You know all about the war, M'sieu. Our regiment had its share in all that was going on. I escaped for a time, but at the taking of the Malakoff, I got this ugly sabre cut across my face, and my arm was broken by a bullet. I suppose I fainted from loss of blood; they told me afterwards I was taken up for dead. I was a long time in hospital. I had fever, and it was months before I could crawl about again, and was strong enough to be shipped off to France, with other invalids like myself.

"All the voyage I thought of father and mother and Toinette, and how glad they would be to have me back, and how soon I should get strong again at home. It was four years since I had left the village; and I thought, with my heavy moustache, and the sabre cut across my face, and my uniform, no one would recognize Rene the vigneron; and I would go first to the auberge and hear the news before making myself known.

"My heart leaped within me as I approached the village and saw the old castle upon its rounded hill, and the swift flowing river. I said to myself, perhaps I shall meet father in his cart, or perhaps Toinette may be at her door as I pass; but though I met several of the villagers, who turned to look with interest at the weather-beaten and wounded soldier, I saw neither father nor Toinette, and no one recognized me.

"I was still weak from illness, and when I reached the auberge I was glad to sit down and call for some wine. The landlord brought it; I asked him to sit down and partake. First I had to answer many questions about what was going on in the East, and then I asked for news of the village. I had my cap drawn down over my forehead, and was sitting with my back to the light, but once or twice I saw my companion look at me narrowly, as if he suspected I was some one he ought to know.

"This was the news I heard: 'Fabre and his wife were both dead. The old man had no heart to do anything after his younger son, who was the stay of the family,' the landlord said, 'had been drawn for the army. Had I happened to meet with Rene Fabre? He was killed at the taking of the Malakoff—his name was seen in the list. That just broke the hearts of the old people, they never lifted their heads again, either of them. The mother went first. Old Fabre died only three weeks ago.'

"'Had they never received a letter?' I asked, making my voice as steady as I could; for one of the kind nurses at Scutari had written for me.

"'No. What letter could they receive when Rene was dead?'

It had been lost, then. I could not repress a groan. 'Was my wound paining me?' the landlord asked. Could he do anything for me?

"I shook my head. 'Where was Pierre Fabre?' I asked.

"Pierre had got into fresh trouble, and had gone away two years before. No one knew anything about him.

"Then came the name that had been trembling on my lips all along—Toinette Dufour.

"Again I observed the landlord look at me inquisitively. 'That was the girl Rene was to have married,' he said. 'Her mother always wanted to marry her to Barbel's Ambrose, because old Barbel was rich. Toinette would not hear of it till the news came that Rene was killed, and then somehow it seemed as if she did not care what became of her, and the mother had her way. It had not been a very happy marriage hitherto, as, indeed, how should it, with a bride with no more heart in her than a ghost.'

IMPROVED AMERICAN
For Coal.
Which for Neatness of Design, Thoroughness of Combustion, Capacity of Oven, Economy in the Use of Fuel and Uniformity of Operation, place them at the best Stoves in the market.
They have been constructed specially for the use of our Western Bituminous Coal (for which all stoves of Eastern manufacture are so ill adapted). Enlarged Flues insure a perfect draft; the plates that line the fire chamber are unusually heavy, and combine certain peculiarities in their construction which give these Stoves superiority over all others in the consumption of its smoke, thus saving a large per centage of fuel.
