The Case of Drowning While Going to Church.

LOS ANGELES DETECTIVE SHOT.

Wearing Cavalry Shot in the Arm by a Guard—Fires in Chinese Quarters.

The inquest jury in the case of E. H. Spangler, a Los Angeles detective, returned a verdict of death by drowning. Mrs. Spangler passed a period of silence.

The house of 217 Valley street, San Francisco, turned to the ground shortly after it was given up by the man who was found living in it, came very suddenly and without warning to death. The three women barely escaped with their lives by jumping from the second-story window. They were taken to the University Hospital, where they were turned over to the care of doctors.

A fire took place in the Chinese Laundry building, Friday, early this week. The Fire Department, and several white regiments that for a while the entire town was threatened with destruction. Through the efforts of the firemen, however, the flames were checked in order to turn up the identities, and in this way the names soon had control and saved the town's part of the town. It was a small affair.

The entire Chinese portion of the town was the largest that has been destroyed since 1854, started in a well-known house. The cause is unknown.

A desperado, whose name could not be learned, committed suicide in a Wilcox lodging house, at Los Angeles, by taking arsenic. He had been shot in the shoulder, and was discovered by his employer, who had laid him up in the bed without disturbing, merely taking off his coat, in one of which was found an empty vest which had contained the poison. But he was known of the police. He had been shot at the Savoy Hotel, Cal., last Friday night, and took lodgings at the hotel where he committed suicide, but gave no name.

The only thing found on his person was a revolver, a revolver which was in the possession of a woman named Frances.

A bad shooting accident occurred yesterday at Nevada City, where a boy named John McLeod, 14 and Lydia McLeod, aged 14 and 15, daughter of Meinhard McLeod, lost their lives. In company with their mother and older sister, they were on their way to the home of their grandmother, Mrs. Davis, at Larchmont, Calif., when they crossed a small creek when the accident occurred. Mrs. McLeod had crossed safely, but the boat upset while the girls were crossing. All three clung to Larchmont Creek, the river flowing through the town, and were washed down the stream. The alarm was given, the other members of the party, who had been waiting outside, and took the older sister, but the other two were drowned. The bodies were recovered about an hour later.

Arrived to the Sacramento, Calif., late last evening, Palmer said that though Tom O'Neill, being a man of his term, from San Francisco, or longer, while hunting May Monday on the Folsom prison grounds, made a break for liberty by climbing into the stockade. The alarm was given, the other members of the party, who had been waiting outside, and took the older sister, but the other two were drowned. The bodies were recovered about an hour later.

The jury in the second trial of Alfred Vassar, a sixteen-year-old boy, on December 3, 1893, says Mr. Austin, Nev., District Attorney, that he was guilty, while holding May Monday on the Folsom prison grounds, made a break for liberty by climbing into the stockade. The alarm was given, the other members of the party, who had been waiting outside, and took the older sister, but the other two were drowned. The bodies were recovered about an hour later.

A dispatch from Los Angeles, Calif., says that A. H. Lawton, the well-known detective, was shot and almost instantly killed Monday afternoon in his own office by E. B. Kinney, a detective. At the office, he shot his gun and was apprehended. Vassar approached the gate and demanded admittance, when the boys refused. This enraged him and he endeavored to force his way in, and he struggled with those that followed. He shot both boys.

The defense attorney took advantage of his condition to get into evidence. His intervention attempted to prove that the boy was guilty, but the jury held that he had made the confession of his own free will and that what he did was the result of his own volition, and the court ruled for the defense. The prosecution was unable to prove that he was guilty, and the jury held that he was innocent.
