

THE EVENING NEWS.

Monday, September 20, 1912.

Written for "THE EVENING NEWS" REFLECTIONS IN THE GAVAYARD AND OF THE RE-UNION.

J. H. LYON.

Peace to the ashes of my ancient friends Who lie interred, beneath these mould'ring mounds.

Where now the solitary tombstone keeps Sentinel, and where the sacred earth has been To every passing breeze; you once were gay, And full of wisdom, joy, and social mirth. The talented, the smart men of your day— You're all here now, and mingling with the clay. You wait in silence, for your earthly birth, Mysterious change! and shall their bodies rise From earth, to meet their spirits from the skies.

When worms, and putrefaction have destroyed The remains of all that once were here, That's not, with all the elements alloyed, Earth, Air, Gas, of this mud-and-sphere; Start not ye sceptics, for ye saints rejoice, There's nothing lost, great Nature never does.

Heaps of 'em! Two low and rotting with the clod, The seed of human form will from it spring And rise immortal in the form of God. When trees from sin, and sin's destroying sting, Ye, ye shall rise and, these elements all, From which your bodies on this earth were made,

By eating, breathing, will be at a call, Bones, flesh, nerves, sinews, beautifully arrayed To form again, your bodies from the shade Of dark forgetfulness and dreary death. Say, shall the great designer not have power To say, Retire into your form again, The presence of your first estate and do, 'em! As a live forever without toil or pain, With life, and light, and joys of heavenly power?

Free from the curse of earth's turmoil, and alarm Where nature will not need again, Re-form! Come then, my soul, keep near the faith divine While gazing o'er the tombstones of the dead That you'll arise, as 'twas of Jesus said When he commanded, Wade into the Sea.

MANAGE G. M. M.

Nellie Davis was the prettiest, sweetest, best and dearest little girl in Hillsburg, and when Tom Carter fell head-over-heels in love with her, nobody blamed him in the least.

And when the parson gave consent, and they went to housekeeping in a cozy, birdnest of a little house, on the south side of the town, everybody prophesied all sorts of happiness for the pretty bride.

And, truth to tell, Nellie Carter was very happy. It is a very pleasant thing to go to housekeeping for the first time, with everything spick-and-span new and shiny, and if you have some one you love very much for a companion, it is still pleasanter.

Now, Nellie did love that great blundering Tom Carter with all her might and main, and there was only one thing to disturb her peace of mind, and that was the very pink of tidiness, and Tom the most careless fellow alive.

He kept his person neat and nice—but he kept his personal belongings anything else. In vain did Nellie braid a handsome morris case, and tuck it inside the closed door for Tom to put his slippers in—Tom would persist in tossing his slippers under the parlor sofa. To have 'em hang in the hall, she thought, was a disgrace, and she would suggest that the rack in the hall was the place for his hat and overcoat. Tom would fling his overcoat, wet or dry, on her pretty, shining, made bed, and drop his hat anywhere.

In vain did Nellie make a place for everything, for Tom invariably tossed everything down in some other place. Now little Mrs. Nellie was only human, and Tom's slovenly ways annoyed her exceedingly. She was resolved not to spoil the peace of their cozy home by scolding, but how to cure him she could not tell.

She bore with him with the patience of an angel, until one morning, after he had gone up town, she went into the parlor broom in hand, and there lay Tom's heavy shawl, right across the centre-table, ruthlessly crushing beneath it the pretty trifles which lay upon the marble top.

"Now I can't stand this, and I won't!" said Nellie, as she carefully raised the shawl from the delicate treasures, and discovered the ruins of a favorite Bohemian vase.

"I don't know what to do, but this I will have!" she continued, with the little bit of wisely said which every good wife must have. It is expedient to get along at all with that occasionally unreasonable animal, a man.

"Some way must and shall be discovered to cure Tom of such performances as this!" went on Mrs. Nellie as she removed the ruins of her vase, and all the morning she went round at her work with scarlet lips closely compressed, and a little flash in her brown eyes which argued well for Mr. Tom's domestic subjugation.

Woman's wit having a will, seldom fails to find a way. And when a determined little woman says "quit!" and "shall," masculine insubordination might as well surrender at once.

Before Mrs. Nellie closed her bright eyes that night she had arranged her plans for the campaign against her liege lord, who slept the sleep of the innocent at her side.

But she meant to give him one more chance. So, after breakfast, when Tom drew on his boots and gave his slippers their usual toss under the sofa, she gently said:

"Tom, dear, hadn't you better put our slippers in the case?"

"No; let 'em alone, so they'll be handy to-night."

"But, Tom, dear, they look so un tidy."

"Why, no, they don't. A thing looks as well in one place as another. What's the use of a man's having a home if he can't keep things where he wants 'em?" said rebellious Tom.

"What's the use of keeping a woman on her feet all day to pick up things after you?" asked Mrs. Nellie, without the least show of temper.

"Don't pick 'em up. Just let 'em alone, and then I can find 'em when I want 'em," declared Mr. Tom, as he gave her a kiss, and took himself off. And the moment the door closed on him, Nellie's red lips compressed again, and her brown eyes were the same look they had worn yesterday.

"War it is, then!" she said to herself. "Now, Master Tom, we shall see who wins the field!"

She sat quietly about her morning's work, and when Tom came home to dinner, everything was in its usual good order. It remained so, and Nellie busied herself with her sewing until nearly time for Tom to return to supper.

Then she arose and put away her work, and prepared, as she said to herself, "to open a campaign."

First she put Tom's slippers where he always left them, under the sofa. Then she tossed his shawl upon the piano, and his hat, hat on the centre-table. She brought some of her dresses and hung them across the chair and on the sofa. Her fur and sequin rapped in Tom's special arm-chair, and her best bonnet kept Tom's slippers company under the sofa, while her own slippers lay on the mantle.
