The Brazilian Trade.

By the agreement of reciprocity with Brazil the United States would be a gainer, although our main article of import from that country—coffee—was almost entirely admitted free before the treaty.

At the same time, if it is true, Brazil has very much to gain from the treaty, especially in the matter of coffee.

It is true that Brazil has a large coffee trade with the United States, and that the treaty will increase this trade.

The treaty will also increase the trade in other goods between the United States and Brazil.

The treaty is a great benefit to both countries, and it is to be hoped that it will be ratified.
