

Just being that of the assassin Pozzi at Belfort in October, 1905.

A SUBSTANTIAL SALARY.

The salary and emoluments of the public executioner are anything but contemptible. M. de Paris has a fixed annual income of 6,000 francs ($1,200) to which must be added a further sum of 5,000 francs ($1,000) for the upkeep of the guillotine. He has four assistants, two of whom are paid 4,000 francs ($800), and the other two 3,000 francs ($600) per annum. Then an allowance of 10 francs ($2) is made to each executioner for every day that the guillotine is in operation. An important perquisite is the sale of new and second-hand "guillotine" cigar cutters, which are much sought after in certain circles. The net annual income of the Deibler may, therefore, be calculated at $6,000 francs ($1,200).

M. Deibler lives in a nice little villa in the rue de Billancourt near the "fortifications" (fortifications). It is a kind of Swiss chalet in the midst of a garden with a fine lawn overlooking the city. You would say, "there lives a philosopher" and you would add, "on seeing the spire of the 'mistrustful one'." As soon as the bell sounds at the garden gate is pulled, the blinds are let down by a machine—probably by an automatic arrangement. On a closer inspection you perceive that the gate is protected, doubtless as a precaution against a sudden attack on the part of those terrible Parisian hoodlums, the Apaches, for M. Deibler, in the nature of things, must have more enemies than friends.

WHERE EXECUTIONER LIVES.

Here, then, lives M. Deibler in the bosom of his family when he is not called away by his official duties. This villa, by the way, has a history. It was purchased by Louis Deibler after he had guillotined Ravachol, when the terror of anarchist vengeance was such that not a landlord in Paris dared to accept the executioner as a tenant. The purchase price was 25,000 francs ($5,000), part of which was furnished by the state.

Deibler's family consists of madame and a little daughter. Madame was at one time a pretty laundress in the boulevard Exelmans—she is still pretty, of course—and they say it was a love match. There is no accounting for tastes.

AT HIS CAFE.

Among his friends M. Deibler is known as "M. Anatole." The initiated can find him at his cafe in the boulevard Exelmans, but it can readily be imagined that he does not court publicity. I do not think M. Deibler will take his "execution" very much to heart. He may reckon on compensation of some sort or other, but it must not be forgotten that he is not a state functionary. The public executioner is an "undertaker," so he will have no legal claim to a pension.

As regards this world's goods, M. Deibler is comfortably off. Like a good bourgeois, he has built a six-story house in the rue de la Convention, which will be let out in flats, the rent of which will ensure him a sufficient income. He has an automobile and a bicycle. What more can he desire?

"There are many worse off than I," he has been understood to say, and most people will agree with him. Yes, the "Widow" is doomed. With her bucket of sawdust she has been costing dear of late. In view of the rarity of executions it has been computed that each time she operates she costs the state 10,000 francs ($2,000).

REAL BRITISH EMPIRE RULERS

of the British empire. They are assistants—go-betweeners perhaps of those who crave favors through the women enthroned in power.

The names of the women given have never been publicly announced before. But even a stranger could almost get them told him should he ask in the inner circles or at the clubs. They are leaders of society and particularly that section of society known as the "smart set" which of late has been so much abused and of whose doings, so much has been "revealed" by Father Vaughan and other preachers.

There is intrigue, of course, in London drawing rooms, but the real work is done in the privacy of the country house, where the hostess invites a score or two of guests for a week, a fortnight or a week-end. It is here that are fought many battles royal between opposing camps. It is here that king and prince, cabinet minister and department chief, general and admiral, and all those on the lower rungs of the great ladder of the government are bewitched. It is here that great generals are deposed from commands or are bothered in administration by kickers of the war department. It is here that admirals are put on half pay or shore work in order to make way for an important command for the favorite of the drawing room. It is here that scandals are hatched up; honors and titles apportioned and all sorts of great financial deals outlined.

"PITCHFORKED" INTO POSITION.

It is in the country houses of England that hundreds of society men are pitchforked into lucrative government positions or promoted in the services. Nothing is too small for the coteries of leaders; nothing too big for these clever, brilliant women to attempt.

Two notable cases, one of each kind, may here be mentioned. The most important event decided in a country house intrigue was the disposal of Lord Curzon of Kedleston from the viceroyalty of India. He was driven to resignation because of his beautiful American wife seeing the balance against him, although it was recognized that he was India's best viceroy.

Perhaps the most flagrant case of pitchforking by the women rulers was the minor case of the son of Field Marshal Sir Evelyn Wood. He was a captain in an insignificant regiment, and had not especially distinguished himself outside of drawing rooms, although he saw service on the staff during the Boer war. One day he was made major of the Tenth Hussars. This, the crack Hussar regiment of the British army, almost entitled to a man over the appointment. Major Wood was lifted over the heads of many captains. Relate this to the ordinary person who knows of the rules and regulations of the army and he will tell you such a thing cannot be done. Yet it was done and has been undone.

HARD BATTLE FOUGHT OUT.

It was only a few weeks ago that a terrible battle was fought out in country houses over the soon-to-bevacant command of the home fleet, the premier sea post of the navy. According to precedent and merit the vacancy was to be filled by Lord Charles Beresford, but the petticoats in the leading cliques objected to Lord Charles. The Beresfords have all been rough and ready men, secure in their own family strength and abilities. In the service of men. In society he is the most popular. He is a commoner and his wife is not of the smart set. Lord Charles was opposed to Rear Admiral Curzon-Howe, one of the darlings of society. As a

FISH HATCHERIES.

What Uncle Sam Does at These Establishments.

One of the most beneficial branches of work conducted by the national government aims to strengthen the fishing industries and promote a supply of cheap aquatic food, while incidentally encouraging sport. For these purposes it has in operation thirty-two stations at which the eggs of fish are for the hatcheries. The government now raises all the leading varieties of fish found on the coast, and in the inland waters, upward of fifty in number, and of late has given much attention to catfish.

All of the catfish given away in 1905 had been carried along to the fingerling stage. Nearly half a million of them were raised for distribution. The other important groups of fingerlings and yearlings were black spotted trout (6,385,031), brook trout (1,883,454), crappie and strawberry bass (859,592), large mouth black bass (715,111), and sunfish (47,908). The government also gave away (mostly as fry) 398,599,170 pike perch, 329,388,000 whitefish, 203,256,000 catfish, 144,779,226 yellow perch, 169,557,000 cod, 118,214,000 lobsters, 117,881,188 chinook salmon (mostly in eggs), 122,040,000 lake herring, 41,324,735 lake trout and 33,237,000 shad (mostly fry).

The first consideration in the distribution of the product of the hatcheries is to make ample return to the waters from which eggs have been collected. The remainder of the fish are sent to applicants throughout the country for stocking state waters, fishing preserves, private ponds and streams, etc., and are delivered free of charge to the applicant at the railroad station nearest the point of deposit. In 1905 4,300 such applications were received, an increase of 15 per cent over the previous year, and a demand so far in excess of the resources of the bureau that many applications had to be continued on file, to be filled from the succeeding year's stock. The output, especially of black bass (both large mouth and small mouth), crappie and the catfishes, was inadequate, although many more of these fishes were produced in 1905 than in any previous year.—N. Y. Tribune.

every day. Yet such is the declaration, based on scientific data, made by Prof. Ralph S. Barr, of Cornell University, an authority on physical geography and a seismologist of high repute, who, in the current number of Leslie's Weekly, explains the causes of earthquakes and defines the regions of violent seismic activities. A page of photographs showing remarkable earthquake effects heightens the impression produced by this interesting and informing essay. Other noteworthy illustrations of the issue include pictures of the devastation wrought by the recent typhoon at Hongkong; T. Dart Walker's drawing on the front, representing an admiral boarding his flagship in rough weather; snap shots of the Naval Academy Princeton football game at Annapolis; glimpses of the immense Elmer irrigation works which the government is constructing in the arid section of the west; and the photo contest display. The illustrated letterpress features include articles by Eleanor Franklin, on American women in London; Harriet Quimby, on the struggles and triumphs of the popular actress, Rose Stahl; Hale Grant, on the training of animals for the stage; and Mrs. C. R. Miller, on seamanship drill at the naval academy. A M. Davies Ogden contributes a ballad, "Jasper," which is a study in the stock market, and gives the usual reliable hints to would-be fortune makers.

A SALMON LADDER IN SCOTLAND.

Salmon culture is carried on in a thoroughly scientific manner in Scotland and most gratifying results are obtained. The picture shows a salmon ladder in a Sutherlandshire river. The ascent of many of the Scotch streams has been made so difficult by weirs that these ladders are constructed so that the fish may get to their spawning ground. A salmon can leap six or eight feet and can thus make its way up the river.

THE CAUSE OF EARTHQUAKES.

To most persons it will seem a surprising statement that somewhere on the globe an earthquake, of greater or less intensity, occurs during every hour of

HEIRESS SEARCHING WORLD FOR LOVER.

DAUGHTER OF MILLIONAIRE WHO IS SEARCHING FOR HER LOVER

Miss Bertha Paul, daughter of Frank Paul of Montreal, is the young woman who has been recently seen searching the world for a lover. She is the daughter of a German army, her childhood lover, much mystery surrounds the romance. Complications have been added to the affair by the fact that Miss Paul's photo was given to the press by A. G. Kaufman, a New York manufacturer, who refused to divulge the identity of the young woman, hoping, as he has declared, to lure Becker to his old sweetheart's side. Mr. Paul, who is wealthy, is said to have discouraged young Becker's attentions to his daughter. Another odd twist is given to the affair by the announcement that Baron von Razkolev, a Russian nobleman, is a suitor for Miss Paul's hand. Becker was last traced to Florida, where the trail was lost. Miss Paul is at present in Europe. Much interest will follow her search.

Lord Charles Beresford commander-in-chief of the home station, and invited him full command of not alone the channel fleet, the home squadrons of Ireland and Scotland, but also of the Atlantic fleet.

PETTICOATS OF THE ARMY.

Recently the petticoats have again turned their attention to the army. Lord Kitchener's term as commander-in-chief in India will be up next year. Diplomats and soldiers who have the army's interest at heart are trying to have the appointment extended, for Kitchener's work is by no means finished. But the petticoats eliques have two candidates, General Sir Ian Hamilton and General Sir John French. The former is a good soldier and a handsome man. His wife is daughter of a baronet, and he is of the smart set. The latter, like Sir Evelyn Wood, is a great favorite with the ladies.

At present the battle is raging in half a dozen country houses. Sir John French is the favorite in the betting. Ireland, Egypt and South Africa are all having their destinies arranged for them these days in country houses. Sir admirals and others are being entertained this week at this house, next week at that.

And a host of devouring office or honor seekers are watching the game. For the petticoats are rustling. CHARLES BYNG-HALL.
