State Farm in Juab County Visited by Experts and Enthusiastic Agriculturists.

VARIED EXPERIMENTAL TESTS

Being Conducted to Show Best Methods of Growing Wheat, Corn. Alfalfa and Other Crops.

Special Correspondence Nephi, Juab Co., July 15 .- Prof. J. C. Hogenson, agonomist at the Utah Agricultural college, accompanied by a rowd of enthusiastic farmers, visited the state arid farm near this city yesterday. Among the excursionists, were Prof. L. A. Merrill, editor of the Deseret Farmer; Dr. E. D. Ball, director of the state experiment station; the Rev. S. H. Goodwin of Provo, a member of the experiment station staff; F. D. Farrell, government expert at the Juab county farm, and J. W. Paxman. About 50 farmers, many with their wives and children, attended the demostrations. Prof. Hogenson conducted the party around the farm and explained the various experiments.

The state dry farm in Juab county is a tract of 40 acres, divided into 170 plats, half of which are left fallow each year to conserve moisture. It takes two seasons' rain and snow to mature one crop, hence the soil is cropped on alternate years only. In speaking of the different experiments, Prof. Hogenson said: eret Farmer; Dr. E. D. different experiments, Prof. Hogenson said:

"We are conducting various tests on this farm; variety tests for fall wheat, rate of seeding, methods of seeding, cultivation tests, depth of plowing, continuous cropping versus fallowing, rotation and green manuring and variety tests of grasses and time of seeding.

"Corn is becoming a very profitable dry farm crop. The question is, shall we plant corn thickly or thinly, and shall we cultivate it thoroughly or not?

"Wheat is also an excellent dry farm crop. Fall wheat has been found to be the best. The best plot of wheat on this farm was planted in August last year and will yield over 40 bushels to the acre. Late seeding is better than early."

In wheat seeding tests, it has been found that three pecks to the acre is the best sowing on dry farm lands. Broadcast sowing, the old time method, has proved very unsatisfactory.

The alfalfa tests were also shown and explained. A plat of alfalfa which had been planted with a hoc, as the only implement, yielded an excellent crop.

"On the dry land," Prof. Hogenson said, "alfalfa should be sown thinly, in rows, and should be frequently cultivated."

A tour of the farm was made, after which the visitors were served re-
