How Denmark Secured a Telegraph Station at Shanghai.

The Great Northern Telegraph Company, of Denmark, had secured the right to use the Russian land the right to use the Russian land lines reaching through Siberia to Wladivostok, a port just northeast of Corea. They proposed to lay a sub-marine cable thence, via Nagasaki, to Shanghal, and from Shanghai to Hong Kong. It seemed needful to obtain permission to bring the wires ashore at Shanghai, and the com-missioner went to Pekin for this purpose. He met with a refusal, curt and decisive. This outrageous re-quest was like a bomb-shell in the I'sung-li Yamun (Foreign Office). The very hairs in Prince Kung's venerable pigtail stood on end. The impudence of these barbarians was astounding. Did they not know that the short line, constructed some the short line, constructed some years before from Shanghai to Bea-con, had so offended the mighty
