VIVISECTION.

In a letter to the London Morning Post, Mr. G. Hoggan, M. B. and C. M., makes the following revelations of his own experience in vivisection. He says:—"I venture to record a little of my own experience in the matter, part of which was gained as an assistant in the laboratery of one of the greatest living experimental physiologists. In that laboratory we sacrificed daily from one to three dogs, besides rabbits and other animals, and, after four months' experience, I am of opinion that not one of those experiments on animals was justified or necessary. The idea of the good of humanity was simply out of the question, and would have been laughed at, the great aim being to keep up with, or get ahead of, one's contemporaries in science, even at the price of an incalculable amount of torture needlessly and iniquitously inflicted on the poor animals. During three campaigns I have witnessed many harsh sights, but I think the saddest sight I ever witnessed was when the dogs were brought up from the cellar to the laboratory for sacrifice. Instead of appearing pleased with the change from darkness to light, they seemed seized with horror as soon as they smelt the air of the place, divining apparently their approaching fate. They would make friendly advances to each of the three or four persons present, and as far as eyes, ears, and tail could make a mute appeal for mercy eloquent, they tried it in vain. Even when roughly grasped and thrown on the torture trough, a low complaining whine at such treatment would be all the protest made, and they would continue to lick the hand which bound them till their mouths were fixed in the gag, and they could only flap their tails in the trough as their last means of exciting compassion. Often when convulsed by the pain of their torture this would be renewed, and they would be soothed instantly on receiving a few gentle pats. It was all the aid or comfort I could give them, and I gave it often. They seemed to take it as an earnest of fellow-feeling that would cause their tortures to come to an end—an end only brought by death. Were the feelings of experimental physiologists not blunted they could not long continue the practice of vivisection. They are always ready to repudiate any implied want of tender feeling; but I must say that they seldom show much pity; on the contrary; in practice they frequently show the reverse. Hundreds of times I have seen, when an animal writhed with pain, and thereby deranged the tissues, during a delicate disection, instead of being soothed it would receive a slap and an angry order to be quiet and behave itself. At other times, when an animal had endured great pain for hours without struggling or giving more than an occasional low whine, instead of letting the poor mangled wretch loose to crawl painfully about the place in reserve for another day's torture, it would receive pity so far that it would be said to have behaved well enough to merit death; and as a reward would be killed at once by breaking up the medulla with a needle, or, "pithing," as the operation is called. I have often heard the professor say when one side of an animal had been so mangled, and the tissues so obscured by clotted blood, that it was difficult to find the part searched for, 'Why don't you begin on the other side?' or, 'Why don't you take another dog? What is the use of being so economical?' One of the most revolting features in the laboratory was the custom of giving an animal on which the professor had completed his experiment, and which had still some life left, to the assistants to practise the finding of arteries, nerves, &c., in this living animal, or for performing what are called fundamental experiments upon it—in other words, repeating those which are recommended in the laboratory handbooks. I am inclined to look upon anæsthetics as the greatest curse to vivisectible animals. They alter too much the normal conditions of life to give accurate results, and they are, therefore, little depended upon. They, indeed, prove far more efficacious in lulling public feeling towards the vivisectors than pain in the vivisected. Connected with this there is a horrible proceeding that the public, probably, knows little about. An animal is sometimes kept quiet by the administration of a poison called 'droorara,' which paralyzes voluntary motion while it heightens sensation, the animal being kept alive by means of artificial respiration until the effects of the poison have passed off. On the Continent, I have often seen animals operated upon in this condition before an audience, who, as they were incapable of showing the pain they felt, were supposed by those present to be insensible to it, while all the time the poor brutes were suffering double torture that the feelings of the audience might be spared. To this recital, I need hardly add that, having drunk the cup to the dregs, I cry off, and am prepared to see not only science, but even mankind, perish rather than have recourse to such means of saving it."

STILL VICTORIOUS.—Many years have passed since Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder was first offered to the public for their trial and approval according to its merits, and its superiority over all Baking Powders, and other means for making wholesome, light, sweet bread and biscuits has been established by their verdict. Still victorious, standing to-day in the estimation of thousands as the only safe and reliable powder to use. Those who have not should test it, as also his True Flavorings, Nectarine, Vanilla, etc., which are not only equal but superior to anything ever used for flavoring cakes, pies, &c.
