Mark Twain understands newspaper responsibilities. He says: "Mr. Greeley is going to lecture on the Byron scandal. We have no authority for making this statement, but then it makes an interesting item of news, and the inexorable business of a newspaper is to collect interesting news."

The young King of Greece has gratified his Jewish subjects in Corfu by being present at their synagogue during worship. The Ark was opened as the King took his seat on a throne, and the rabbi called on Heaven to rain blessings on the heads of the King and his son.

The poor Princess of Wales is far from well, and it is said she is very weary of laying corner-stones, listening to dull speeches, and receiving purses for various charities. The gossips do say that recently she declared to the Prince of Wales that she actually dreaded to open the paper which was presented to her in the morning, in which her tasks for the day were appointed.

A lady writer in the last number of the Revolution has a spicy and sarcastic article on "Homes for Fallen Men." She says the men do not desire to be bad, but are led astray by a pretty foot, a smile, or the flutter of a pocket handkerchief. She things most of our public men would seek these homes. and that midnight missions would be efficacious. She would have wealthy young men who might come to them taught some useful trade, and would feed them on cracked wheat twice a day!

The last skirmish in the vaccination war in England is rather a singular affair. A gentleman having purchased a lot in the Highgate Cemetery, in London, undertook to erect a stone to the memory of his child, with the inscription, "Died from the mortal effects of vaccination." The authorities of the graveyard objected to such a record, and the case was carried into the Police Court. It was proved that the words of the proposed inscription were those of the verdict of the Coroner's jury. A higher court is to decide the question at issue.
