Last'evening, an interesting programme, previously prepared, was well carried out on behalf of the Sunday School, It was so judiciously arranged that there was no montony, but variety enough to interest those of mature years, and what of the house is more important, those of very youthful mind.

One of the most striking pieces presented was one written by Sister Sinah Bishop, a recitation given in unison by seven fine looking girls, headed by Miss E. Jennings, all the offspring of plural marriage; indeed that was the theme, the declaration that "inasmuch as their parents had given them honor in that order, so would they seek to honor them," was well brought out.
