THAT CHARMING TOUCH OF COLOR.

The craze for some touch of contrasting color that presents itself upon all sorts and conditions of costumes this autumn season, has invaded the shirt waist field likewise, and disports itself gaily upon the smart blouses of white linen, that heretofore were considered fully adequate to all the demands of fashion when relying upon the plainness and workmanship and fine material. The one in the picture displays a linen of good quality, an Irish weave with strappings of linen in a crushed strawberry shade, each strap fastened into place with a little round linen-covered button. The same style is shown with green, blue, lavender, dark red, and even brown strappings, and is equally effective in each. The regulation shirt pattern is followed, deep pleats in the shoulder seams affording the requisite fullness; and the sleeve likewise of regulation design, with stiff link-cuffs, that also display the colored trimming strap for a finish. A black velvet ribbon encircles the waist and serves as a belt.
