> The increase of the benefits of the Sabbath schools should be a frequent subject of reflection with those who are actively engaged in this great mission, which constitutes one of the most potent levers in giving proper direction to the coming 'men and women. The teacher's mind should be engaged during the week in preparing his course of instruc tion for the following Sunday, and every lesson should have a definite aim. It should be a leating object to teach one or more clearly defined mainds of the pupils, so that each lesson will be like a sprig from a thrifty plant that will develope and bring forth the blossome of righteousness.

Desultory reading or teaching has not near so good an effect as methodical and of jective instruction. I the Scriptures are the theme, instead of melecting passages at random, the teacher should make up his mind as to what truths or doctrines he wishes to convey and select his lessons accordingly. If an anecdote is told or read, the moral it is capable of conveying should be kept in conspicuous view, as the aim is not so much to enable the pupil to memorize the incidents as to draw profitable conclusions from them. The Sunday school system among the Saints is probatly not excelled as a whole by any other ex tant. This is due largely to the scope of teaching as well as the prove bial energy and adaptability of those engaged in the Gud-given work. These who are laboring in
