THE EVENING NEWS.

Saturday, . . Nov. 7, 1874.

A CHRISTIAN MATINEE.

[BEGGING FOR MONEY TO CHRISTIANIZE UTAH.

[CONCLUDED.]

The Rev. C. H. Fowler, D. D., President of the Northwestern University, was the next speaker. He said they stood face to face with the greatest monstrosity of modern times. He was happy to say that he had no friends among the leaders, and no apology to offer for the murderous Mormons. It could be explained how Mohammedanism had gained its foothold in the East, centuries ago; but it was not so easy to understand how, in this enlightened age, a powerful sect had established itself in the heart of America, dictating terms to the most powerful government on the face of the earth. It was an amazing fact in history. To-day the sect had arisen to such power that they had men to plead for them in Congress, missionaries in all quarters of the globe, wives without number, and children too numerous to be counted. The history of no other religious sect showed such growth in point of numbers; indeed, Mormonism had made during forty years as rapid progress as all the other sects in America combined. It took the Methodist church 40 years to get a membership of 138,000; Mormonism, in 44 years, counted 250,000 members. The Mormon leaders were spoken of as cutthroats and villains, the vilest men the speaker had ever come in contact with. A few days in Salt Lake had convinced him that the Mormon rank and file were proper objects of pity and of missionary effort, but that Brigham Young and every one of his Bishops should be hung as fast as they could be captured [Applause.] The great masses of the Mormons were people from the Old Country—honest well-meaning people who were captivated by the idea of owning land and a home in the new country. The Mormon missionaries preached repentance and faith in God, and the speaker had no doubt that many of the converts were actually saved as much as the converts of any other religious denomination. Brigham Young was one of the most sagacious statesmen of the time. The speaker could not conceive how women could submit to the Mormon practices. The great majority of the women dragged out a weary life. The United States Government should take hold of it and remove this blot on our flag and our civilization. There was no need of mercy concerning the leading criminals, though he had profound sympathy for the people under them. The railroad running through Ogden would do about as much towards airing Mormonism in Salt Lake as a railroad in Cairo would do towards stopping the liquor traffic in Chicago. The opening of the gold mines would be more effectual in Utah, for those miners were a class of men who would pull Brigham's nose if he attempted his favorite policy with them. A few Texan outlaws would be God-anointed agents to revolutionize the country. A little backbone on the part of the government authorities would help the case immensely. It could also be helped by the Gospel.

The Rev. C. F. Lyford, who is engaged in missionary service in Provo, in Utah, was next introduced. He said he wished to confirm Gov. Bross' remarks about the geographical importance, the agricultural resources, and the beautiful climate of Utah. That valley was as attractive for residence as any other part of America. Its people were the most unhappy in the world. They were earnest, self-sacrificing, devoted people. There was hardly a people who had sacrificed and suffered so much for their religion. They were under the heel of one of the most unprincipled tyrants on earth. The spirit of Brigham Young and the Mormon priesthood was that of treason to the United States Government and its laws in its most intense form. The people of Utah were kept in complete subjugation to Brigham and his officials, and dare not do otherwise than they command. Ignorance and poverty were the rule among the common people. The women, who cast a larger vote in that territory than did the men, and who voted just as they were ordered by the church officials, were doing more than any others to perpetuate the system which made of them abject slaves and subject to terrible indignities to their sex. The speaker had never seen such an unhappy, God-forsaken, heart-broken, wretched people as he had seen among the Mormon women. When we came to understand what was going on in those valleys our blood began to boil, and we felt like crying out. "How long, oh Lord, how long!" The Gospel and the Bible had been carried into the cities and valleys, with revolvers and rifles for protection. The speaker had known of a minister in Utah who had to go into his pulpit with the Bible in one hand and a revolver in the other. It was necessary there to carry a pistol in one pocket if it was intended to preach the Gospel of Christ. The speaker had been threatened with outrages, he had received warning not to return to the Territory, but he had replied that, when a boy, he had quite a talent for close shooting, and that he had now consecrated this talent to God (applause); that his skill as a marksman would surely be exercised in the event of any molestation, and if they attempted to interfere with his missionary work he would make some of them bite the dust. He was not molested, though he knew there were a hundred people in his town who would have murdered him if ordered to do it by Brigham Young. When he went to Provo there were not more than one hundred men in the town, and scarcely one of them would have refused to cut his throat had Brigham so ordered it. Missionaries in Utah were doing a good work, among the young people especially, and also in the mining regions, establishing schools and holding religious services. They were meeting with excellent success, but they needed help from the Eastern States. The children there were anxious to learn, and they were easily reached with books and papers. A school was soon to be opened in the Tintic mining district, and it would not be long before others would be opened in other districts. In this work it was necessary to appeal to the States for aid. Unless they had a place of worship of their own the Mormons would drive them about from place to place. Therefore they were obliged to appeal for help. The property in Provo had cost about $7,000, of which about $5,000 had been paid. About $1,500 had been expended for other purposes. It was necessary to raise $3,500 at once or abandon the work. It must be raised in a few weeks, or else they must turn their backs upon the work and call it a failure. The missionaries stood there deprived of social privileges, with no protection, and afraid to venture out alone for fear of violence being offered, and they needed some help to carry on the work of civilizing the poor people of that territory. The speaker announced that he was a stranger to the audience, but that he came well recommended by prominent men, which would be a sufficient guarantee. He had come to the States for help, and he made an earnest generous appeal for contributions to enable him to go back and resume the work which was now in danger of abandonment for lack of means.

A contribution was then taken up for the spread of gospel privileges in Utah, and a moderate sum of money realized.

Thus ended the Christian Matinee farce in the Chicago Opera House. Some people are easily deluded out of their money, by unscrupulous men with oily tongues and pitiful tales. It is no use going begging unless you have a good tale to tell, something really affecting, well spiced with what are called "Christianity" and "civilization."

The Tribune has the following editorial remarks—

"A meeting was held in this city yesterday 'to further the cause of Christian civilization.' Among the speakers was Dr. Fowler, President of the Evanston University. His speech was filled with the bitterest hatred of the Mormons and their church. The Doctor said that 'Brigham Young and every one of his Bishops ought to be hanged as soon as captured.' This, for a Doctor of Divinity and a teacher of youth is reckless language. The people of Utah, we believe, will get along quite as well without the type of Christianity which Dr. Fowler's address represents as with it. The speaker himself, on reflection, would scarcely advise the extreme measures which he urged yesterday afternoon."

And the Times indulges in the following—

"We know how dear to the heart of John A. Logan is the cause of Christian civilization in Utah, and are not surprised that he should unite with other apostles of monogamy and the righteous cause in lifting his voice in the interest thereof, but really, politics is Mr. Logan's trade, and like the cobbler he should stick to his calling. Why, dozens of excited republican committeemen have been exclaiming. Why has not John come to the aid of our imperilled party in Cook county? Not a word has he said toward the averting of our doom. And here he proposes to talk Christian interest in Utah. It would be a more godly deed to defeat the devilish democracy. Perhaps, though, there are reasons why Mr. Logan doesn't want to be heard, except as the Christian that he is. He and Sidney Smith could hardly talk harmoniously on the financial question, and it would trouble him to know just what to say about the tariff with Jasper Ward standing near. Aside from these and such Christian (for Logan as you know is a Christian man; so are they all, all Christian men,) reasons as he may have, we apprehend that there are no other, save perhaps that he considers that the present isn't his funeral. It's bound to come, though."
