THE FIELD FAMILY.

The Father, Mrs., the Daughter, Mrs. the Son & Son.

New York, Dec. 1.—As it is difficult this afternoon Cyrus W. Field was still alive, but his condition was deteriorating rapidly. He had not slept for many hours. The condition of Field's daughter, Mrs. Liveday, has not improved, and her death is only a question of a few days at best.

Men who have been in Wall street for years find a good deal of similarity between Mr. Field, in his present declining condition, and that of John Brown, and that of John Quincy A. Gilpin, who failed about 1852 and went to Canada and there was still speculation as to whether he would ever return. A former member of Field's firm would suffer the same fate as Arthur Howell, Lester's son-in-law, who was also a partner in the firm of Howell & Co. When it was discovered that Gilpin had loaned money on securities and then turned on them more than he had loaned and then had disappeared, the government of the stock exchange.

REASIDE MR. SWELL.

Every one believed that Mr. Howell was entirely innocent of any knowledge of Mr. Brown's proceedings, and he stoutly asserted that he was. He admitted to the committee that he had written to Mr. Brown, and that he had never thought of questioning his action or investigating his books, although he was a partner. The government did not accept this explanation. They said that Mr. Howell should have given over the books anyway.

Deputy Attorney General W. C. of the Stock Exchange, who asked whether any action would be taken in Mr. Liveday's case by the Exchange, said that nothing had yet been done. He said that the city government in the future, if it is probable, however, that the governors will not move until an investigation of Field's affairs has been completed.

ARMSTRONG COULD.

This afternoon said: "I believe that the only great sufferers are the members of the firm, and I am sorry to say that I am implicated by Mr. Field. I am particularly sorry for Mr. Fletcher, whom I consider as honest a young man as I ever met. The fact is, he has been the plausibl person I ever met. Only two days before the assignment was made I talked with Field, and he rallied off at me like a lion. He said, 'Look here, there are worth every dollar. He is undoubtedly crazy.'

Deputy sheriffs are watching the house of Cyrus Field, expecting him to be summoned to the bedside of his father, when they will place him under arrest. It is also stated that the deputies searched the house late to night.

FIELD A. FALCONER LUMINAR.

New York, Dec. 1.—Edward M. Field, who has stripped his father of all his possessions and upon whose life there is $200,000 insurance, attempted suicide last evening. He has been committed to the Insane Asylum as a dangerous lunatic.

A Confused Mind.

CHICAGO, Dec. 1.—An Elgin, Ill., special says that it is understood that arrangements are completed for the removal of an English millionaire of the milk constituency factories in Illinois and New York which have been owned by the Burton and Militant families for many years. The price is $15 million. The purchase price is not stated, but it is understood that it must be twelve or fifteen millions.

BRIEF TELEGRAMS.

London, Dec. 1.—Goschen, chancellor of the exchequer, disclosed his name to the press, and he is to come to some heating tankard today.

It is reported that Goschen favors the proposal of 12 votes to reject the legal gold issue, to be based on a reserve, partly of gold and partly of consols. The rise in consols was due to rumors to the effect above mentioned.

London, Dec. 1.—A letter addressed from Bishop of Llandaff, Wales, yesterday was found. The note relates to the return. It is feared that other bodies are still beneath the wreckage. The man who had charge of the garrison of the castle of Whalley, Lancashire, the day before the explosion of the mine, was arrested on the charge of having caused the death of those who lost their lives by the explosion. He was subsequently released on bail.

St. Petersburg, Dec. 1.—The price of black bread has doubled within a week. It is reported that a portion of the population of the town has caused intense discontent, bread being the chief article of diet among the soldiers.

He was immediately on his return from his city, almost had no heart conference with the German Emperor.

New York, Dec. 1.—The Herald's Valparaiso despatch says: I hear that the Supreme Court Judge says on the strength of the constitution that that constitution does not countenance the prosecution of civil suits as contemplated against the Ministers of Baltimore's cabinet and the members of Congress.

Chicago, Dec. 1.—The meeting of the prominent and vice-president of the Western railroads, called to formulate a scheme for doing away with the innumerable small offices of freight and express companies existing today, a committee was appointed to prepare a scheme and call another meeting. It is predicted though that the small associations know that the movement will end in a stalemate, just as it did last year.

London, Dec. 1.—The final services over the remains of Lord Lytton were held today at the family residence, Kenwood Park, Musgrave, Hertfordshire.

Dec. 1.—The Wilson Photo-Telic Works at Boston are still at work today at the family residence, Kenwood Park, Musgrave, Hertfordshire.

London, Dec. 1.—The commercial treaty between Germany and Belgium is concluded.

Work of Arbitrators' Vigilance Committee.

The vigilance committee was a body composed of 150 men, who were to be engaged in the regular service of law and the action of the people without respect to officers of the law. It was nothing more than the fusion of a body, arresting them by their usual means, apprehending them quietly and utilizing their power to regular form, systematically, easily and efficiently. It was a clear conviction that bad men never been caught, and was sent to Germany to make up with the law. They entered and approached and discussed on the wire, the people—the people of all professions in one system—determined to ensure in legal form what their services had neglected or ignored. While they lived and served the law, respected, upheld and applauded the faithful servants who enforced the law, and disengaged themselves from the false and faithless administrators.

In 1851 it seemed the country of America was in a state of anarchy and all the worst elements of the criminal classes. To 1858 it was seen that Prudential by the rule of a series of political interests, had let her standards and a recent immigration of other criminals. In 1857, in the same place, the same people under different conditions, and yet in some respects similar findings came from among the same elements, but on a more favorable basis, and determined to set under the law. The same principles were applied in better hands than in 1851 and 1858, the city government was in better hands, the country generally was in better condition.

The influence of the vigilance committee of 1858 had continued and prevailing all the time. The cities of the state were of a higher order than at the earliest date. The early experiences were valuable to individuals as well as to the masses, and when called upon for self-government the people again demonstrated that they have no place like it.

The Way They Got It.

The way men, each of whom rides the vigilance hobby with great zeal, found themselves spending the night in a small country hotel, not exactly by a failure to catch a connecting train. They had scarcely put the light out when it was revealed that the window had been forced open, and one started to attend to it. The door and every cloth and the matress were not at hand, but after some groping they found the closed door.

"I can't judge it," she said, rousing to do so.

"Do try," came from the bed, "we shall suffocate before morning."

The next instant there was a crash in the darkness. "We put our arm through this wretched window," it was explained, "at least we have air now." So they were comfortably to sleep. In the meantime the window had closed tightly, and the glass door of a big bookcase which stood in a corner was shattered. This only exemplifies the old law that "content is as good as medicine for fools as physics."

Scrofula

It more especially than any other hereditary disease, and for this simple reason. Afflicted from youth and inefficient blood, the disease locates itself in the lymphatics, where it remains, and increases in size, until it becomes a general condition where the whole body is affected.
