TESTIMONY IN BRADLEY CASE

Washington, Nov. 22.—The criminal court, in which Mrs. Anna M. Bradley is being tried on the charge of murdering Senator Brown of Utah, will hold no session tomorrow, and as a consequence there will be no further proceedings in the trial until Monday. When the court adjourned today the defense had practically completed its presentation of proof, very little remaining except the testimony of experts, who will be introduced for the purpose of showing that when Mrs. Bradley shot Senator Brown, she was insane.

Appetite—None, The Woeful Reflections of a Withered Dyspeptic.

No substitute for good nature has yet been found. Smiles take root in the stomach. Without good digestion there never can be very much sunshine, for the very simple reason that the stomach and the brain are twins, and that affects one invariably affects the other. The advice that the best road to a person's heart is via the stomach, still holds good.

variety of ways—aching, burning, sensation, an uneasy feeling in the stomach, bloating after eating, fresh, action to food, fermentation, or undigested food, indigestion.

There are few diseases which create such misery—long drawn out, tedious, and distressing. It is a disease which is often overlooked, and which is often mistaken for some other disease. It is a disease which is often overlooked, and which is often mistaken for some other disease.

“What is most needed just now is that our citizens should realize how fundamentally sound business conditions in this country are and how absurd it is to permit themselves to get into a panic and create a stampede by hoarding their savings instead of trusting perfectly sound banks.”

—Extract from President Roosevelt's letter, Nov. 17.

another was recalled for the purpose of clearing up a point, several more of the Salt Lake City witnesses were examined as to the content and bearing of Mrs. Bradley's testimony.

Frederick's uncle, Lyman Shrewsbury of California, told a number of instances of insanity and insanity in Mrs. Bradley's family, Judge Henderson, Senator Brown's partner, narrated inter-views with Mrs. Bradley relative to her testimony, with Mr. Brown and a number of Brown's letters to Mrs. Bradley were read.

The reading of the letters furnished the most interesting incident of the day. The witness, filled with mingled protestations of love and reproaches for the interest in her men, and they stirred Mrs. Bradley to deep emotion. She listened eagerly to the reading, and, as the letters were read, she wept and sobbed, and her face was pale.

Judge Henderson said that after the Brown-Bradley scandal had become public he had seen but little of Mrs. Bradley. He had had the locks of the office changed.

On redirect examination Judge Henderson reiterated his statement that when Brown signed the statement acknowledging the children of Mrs. Bradley, he might have been intoxicated, but he added:

“It is not in his ordinary handwriting, but it was written by him.”

S. A. KING RECALLED.

Samuel A. King was recalled and questioned again regarding Mrs. Bradley's state of mind during his con-versations with her. He said she was extremely excited, and labored under very great stress of mind. He declared he said to her that if the relations of herself and Brown were not broken off both would be ruined.

Continuing he said that at that time Mrs. Bradley's admiration of Brown amounted almost to idolatry. Witness had regarded her as an object of mental collapse. She seemed about to lose control of herself. “And,” added Mr. King, “I said at the time that I would not be surprised at anything she might do.”

“In the conversation with you she was rational, was she not?” asked Mr. Barker.

“At times I thought her quite irra-tional,” replied the witness.

“The burden of her theme,” Mr. King said, “was that Mr. Brown loved her devotedly to the end, and that he would marry her after securing a divorce, and that he must fulfill these promises. She never came to any sensible conclusion, leaping from one thing to another, beginning sentences at variance with the thought in mind.”

“Did she have any other thought than that Brown must do what she wanted him to do?”

“Yes,” said the witness. “She was under the impression that Judge Henderson, Mr. Barker, Colonel Kellogg, Judge King and myself were her enemies; that we were endeavoring to steal Mr. Brown from her; that it was our interference that was bringing about this condition.”

“The gentlemen you name all did influence Brown to return to his wife, did they not?”

“I cannot speak for all, I did.”

The witness added that Mrs. Bradley had been in control of her emotions. “She was a perfect nervous wreck,” he said.

Mr. Barker recalled a conversation the witness had had with him (Mr. Barker) in Salt Lake City in which (Mr. Barker) admitted he had said things he would not repeat here concerning Mrs. Brad-ley's sanity. Witness said that on that occasion he had made an effort to avoid being called as a witness, adding that he had tried to bluff that off.

A Salt Lake City Case Many More Like It in Salt Lake City.

The following case is but one of many similar occurring daily in Salt Lake City. It is an easy matter to verify its correctness. Surely you cannot ask for better proof than such conclusive evidence.

Mrs. M. C. Dale, living at 415 West Eighth South street, Salt Lake City, Utah, says: “For a year or more I was entirely free from kidney complaint until I began suffering from pains in the small of my back and through my loins. When I caught cold or over exerted myself I became very much worse and was often laid up from three days to a week at a time. My kidneys were also very irregular and gave me much distress and annoyance. I heard so many people praising Down's Kidney Pills, that I decided to give them a trial, and procured a box at the F. J. Hill's drug store. They helped me from the first, so I continued taking them until I was cured. I am glad to recommend the remedy that cured me.”

his wife's “spells” would come on when she learned or ladies riding in the slats with him, but there was no occasion for her jealousy. The relation of this peculiarity of the aunt's disposition brought a smile to Mrs. Bradley's face.

SENATOR SUTHERLAND.

United States Senator Sutherland followed Mr. Shrewsbury. He said he had known Mrs. Bradley since 1895. He told of calling on her at the Raleigh hotel in this city immediately after the shooting, but gave no details of the conversation. He said Mrs. Brad-ley's general reputation in Utah was good.

ANNA BISCHEL.

Mrs. Anna Bischel, a teacher of Chil-goco corroborated the testimony of Mr. Shrewsbury concerning the eccentric conduct of Mrs. Ryan. The witness had lived at Mrs. Ryan's house in 1899, 1891 and 1892, and said she was then the subject of frequent “spells.” She had reached the conclusion that Mrs. Ryan was entirely irresponsible.

MRS. BRADLEY'S MOTHER.

Mrs. Bradley's mother, Mrs. Maddison, was recalled to testify concern-ing a visit by her (Mrs. Maddison's) sister, Mrs. Sweeney, in 1905, when Mrs. Sweeney was wanted to take the Bradley children, Mr. Brown, she said, was there, and objected. “He said that under no circumstances could they go; that he would provide for her (Mrs. Bradley) and that he meant to marry her.”

Witness was not cross-examined.

And, Dist. Atty. Given was called by the defense to testify to the fact that when he went to Santa Cruz, Cal., to take the deposition of Mrs. Bradley's father, M. M. Maddison, he found him to be paralytic. Mr. Given spoke freely and gave a frank examination by his chief, Mr. Barker.

Mr. Wells, one of Mrs. Bradley's at-torneys, then began reading former Senator Brown's letter to Mrs. Brad-ley, all of which were summarized in yesterday's Associated Press dis-patches. The first was dated at Nevada, Utah, Dec. 12, 1901. Mr. Wells read the document as if entirely familiar with its contents.

Mrs. Bradley was much affected by it, especially its tender reference to herself. She leaned her head on her left hand and closed her eyes. Her frame shook slightly at times.

After three or four letters had been read, the court, at 2 p. m., took an adjournment until Monday.

ST. GAUDENS PUTS “PANTS” ON EAGLE

In Adorning Bird of Freedom He Follows Mother Nature's Bidding.

INTERVIEWS SHOW FACTS.

Washington Newspaperman States Dis-pute by Talking to and About Mr. And Mrs. Gyps Fulvus.

The discussion following the appear-ance of the first coins of the new mint-age has brought forth much comment in Washington. The discarding of the time honored motto, “In God We Trust,” has not caused so much worry in the newspaper world, however, as the design of St. Gaudens where he shows the American eagle, long may he scream, wearing a highly developed pair of trousers. So agitated did this question become in Washington that a writer on the staff of the Herald of the Capital City comments upon it as fol-lows in a recent impression of that esteemed recorder of public opinion and chronicler of current events:

Call them what you will—trousers, pantaloons, bloomers, divided skirts, overalls, culottes, breeches, or even pants—the American eagle wears them. To this fact the Zoo bears witness, and certainly if the Zoo could submit con-servative testimony it is the Washing-ton Zoo.

The shades of night were getting busy when the inspection of aquiline toilettes was made. Miss Blinn had taken down her hair for the night, and the big bear, who from a similar implication in na-tional affairs, might have been expected to stay up till this question of the eagle's trousers had been settled, had gone shamelessly to sleep.

Also, a moon that was still suffering from growing pains had gotten up to do its best for romanticists, poets—say, and even nature-fakers.

As this was the case, as it was so nearly night, no one can be made to assume responsibility for the statement that the trousers worn by the eagles were really not pajamas. However, the eagle certainly had some covering on his legs.

THE FIRST INTERVIEWED.

The first of the eagles interviewed was the Griffin Vulture, formally known as Gyps Fulvus. Certainly this bird furnished all kinds of encouragement to the idea that our own domestic eagle might have at least progressed as far as trousers.

The first thought stirred upon seeing the creature was that good and historians had been imposing upon the public. For, could this dandified bird, this coxcomb, beside whom Count D'Orsay, Al-Blades, Byron might have looked starchy, by the stern, rapidus creature of warlike and emblematic? It seemed improbable.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Gyps Fulvus were dressed exactly alike, so that no dis-crimination can be made in the charge that each had appropriated the distinctive portions of the other's toilette. The result of the fusion was as follows: A beautiful fluffy gray bow thrown around the neck and opened in front to form an undeniable decollete; a trail which swept over the ground in the masterful lines of a Paganini, two partners' remnant of Revolutionary broadsides and last, and most elegant, a beautiful pair of trousers.

About the latter point there could be no doubt, for Mrs. G. Fulvus, as though conscious of the history under dis-pute, proudly lifted both sides of her skirts to show an incalculable public that even she wore trousers that might have taken up golden room on a coin. To be sure, the design was hardly that of Bond Street. For, instead of two parallel lines, the garment showed an oriental reversion at the ankle. They might, in fact, have adorned the dainty, bedecked ankles of the Princess Scherazade.

Before such striking refutation, there was only one thing to do—bow low and apologize. This apology was met by both Mr. and Mrs. G. Fulvus with an impersonal stare, chilling as if cast through a forenet.

IN ANOTHER FLAT.

Another flat was inhabited by relatives of the G. Fulvus, the Angolan Vulture, from what could be seen of this bird behind its long Latin name of Gypheolax, etc., etc., also, though not indulging in all the finery of its neigh-bor, was able to display an equally voluminous pair of trousers. So were other birds passing on the way to the object of deepest curiosity, the American eagle.

There are two Yankee eagles living in the Zoo, the Aquila chrysaetos, known to a few intimate friends as the Golden Eagle, and the Bald Eagle or Helicetus leucocephalus, which has long spread himself on national coins.

Last night, when approached, the Bald Eagle had relapsed into sleep, from which he was only aroused by many repetitions of “Yankee Doodle” and several sentences of the Declaration. When at last he was persuaded to turn around, it was at once evident that a mistake was made by St. Gaudens. The Bald Eagle does wear trousers, but are they the sprawling, diffusive, unreserved garments of the new coin? Do they come down in two monotonous straight lines from his waist and switch slightly about his toes?

Not a bit of it. In very truth, St. Gaudens, by thus depicting them, hath made an unjustifiable reflection upon the style of the American Eagle. The trousers which he wears are pay-top. No college freshman who wears purple hose and a red band on his hat would need blush for them. Spreading out over the hips, they narrow down gradu-ally, until, at the ankles, they become narrow as provincial opinion.

AN APARTMENT HOUSE.

The rest of the Eagle apartment house revealed many vagaries in the way of personal adornment, and a logical development in the way of trousers. There were some who wore Elizabethan ruffs and puffy little Elizabethan trousers;

there were some whose feathers ran justly advanced against the assertion that neither Audubon, Carver, nor Aquila Pomerina, nor South American Condor, nor the Cathartes Aura can be play trousers which obey more faith-fully modern canons of masculine style than do those of our own Bald-headed Eagle.

They are now-tops of which any one might be proud and St. Gaudens' coin is a libel on them.
