

Engaged for Seventeen Years And Are Not Yet Wedded.

SEVENTEEN years ago, M. L. Brunning and Nellie Cooper pledged their love and vowed that they would be true to each other through weal or woe for the rest of their days.

It was a beautiful romance. Miss Cooper is the daughter of Mrs. and Mr. John Cooper, who conduct the most exclusive boarding house at the beautiful Winona lake, Ind. She is tall, and when Brunning first saw her, she was a young girl in the first flush of the beauty which in her more mature years has made her a beauty. Mr. Brunning is a wealthy Evansville merchant. He is tall and handsome and altogether attractive to the eyes of womanhood. The two met while the man was spending a vacation at the famous Indiana resort. There were long walks together, boat rides on the lovely lake in the moonlight, and the other accessories that aid Cupid in his work of destroying the peace of mind of men at summer resorts.

The two fell in love. Mr. Brunning was no backward lover. He promptly proposed, and was accepted. That was seventeen years ago. The engagement was announced. Friends said: "What a perfect match." and waited for the invitations to the marriage. Seventeen years have passed and still Mr. Brunning and Miss Cooper are betrothed. Still there is no hint of the day when the two shall be made one. Upon a bluff on McDonald island, in the most beautiful spot on Winona lake, there stands a beautiful mansion which Brunning has built for the day when the reluctant fiancée of seventeen years shall yield to his pleadings and come to live in the home he has prepared for her as his bride. He is patient. He has waited seventeen years and he can wait longer. The house is fully furnished and ready for occupancy; but the shutters are drawn tightly over the windows, the doors are only closed, and no ray of light ever comes into the place, or will, until there comes a bride to hold the house warming.

Each Saturday Mr. Brunning leaves the cares of his business in Evansville and hurries down to spend the Sunday with his beautiful fiancée at Winona lake. But they do not go to visit Meribek, the beautiful home that stands waiting on McDonald island. That is to be left untouched and unused until Miss Cooper becomes Mrs. Brunning. How long before this event will take place is a source of perennial comment among the people of Winona. The constancy of the man and the reluctance of the woman after she has said "yes" to name the day has made Meribek and Brunning famous. But Miss Cooper, actuated by a sincere love for parents who are fast aging, refuses to agree to any day for the marriage. The love of a devoted daughter has so far proven stronger than the love of a betrothed sweetheart. Each time the lover presses his suit and implores the girl to make him happy by naming a wedding day she pleads for further time, and each time the patient lover has granted the delay.

The man in this strange romance has grown middle aged in waiting, and in the hair of the maiden fair the silver of autumn is beginning to show among the locks of raven black. And still their love does not waver. Still the hero comes courting each Saturday night, just as he did seventeen years ago, when they were both young and had just discovered that they loved each other. Never once has Brunning expressed the least impatience. He knows the love for parents, which inspires his fiancée to force him to wait, is only proof of a noble character, and he is willing to wait—how long he does not know himself.

Mountain and valley are now resplendent with the gorgeous tints of autumn foliage, nowhere so brilliant as in that picturesque region traversed by the Erie Railroad. If you go East try it—the scenery is delightful and the sleeping and dining car service provide "all the comforts of home."
