

AN AVALANCHE OF COLOR.

Present Styles Are Trying to Women With Poor Complexions--Bab's Fashion Talk.

With the avalanche of color that has overtaken on this spring there followed as a natural course a something that has been talked about and against and indulged in from the very beginning of the world,--the use of rouge and powder. With the curious new blue gray, the brilliant shades of orange that suggest nasturtiums and all the trying violet color it is difficult to find a natural complexion that will harmonize with two or three or four or five or six of these colors gleefully rampant on the fashionable cheeks.

Nobody knows when rouge was first used. Certainly it was old when Cleopatra chose a little of it to add to her beauty, while powder was in such ordinary use that the beautiful Laux put a little on her face because she blushed too much when she met the gallant poet who adored her. There is an old story of the married father who came home and with great anger and much quickness said to his daughter, "I have heard that you use rouge." The daughter looked at him and answered, "Yes, father, I do." "Very well," said the irate parent, "go up stairs and wash it off at once." She did so, and in a little while there appeared on her face a pale, faded girl, whose father gave one look at her and then said, "Go up stairs and put it on again."

Evidently she was not the maiden who gave a dash of red to her cheeks and dust to the other and then conclude that no one noticed the added color and believe that they understand the art of make-up. Any woman who realises that a little pink or a little white or a little black or a little brown will improve her appearance is wise in using it, but she needs first of all to ever that occurs it is quickly wiped off, but there is just enough to make the rouge and powder stay in position. Then comes the rouge, it is the variety known as the "rouge," which is not from our French cousins, and it is applied in the old-fashioned way with a henna foot. Some gosses under the eye. The way to get the most out of the powder is to use the very tip of the atomizer nose. Then comes the really trying part, the blending of the powder with the rouge, the laying on of sufficient white to soften the red and make it look beautiful and yet not cause it to disappear. What must be attained is a rather slight color, white, however, has the advantage of not fading.

Then there is need for a soft pencil, Partisan in the eye, make and mark down, for my lady, being wise, knows her brows must match her cheeks, which are brown and not black. After carefully dipping her finger into a bottle of cerise she runs it over the place where the eyebrows ought to be, so that every particle of powder and rouge is removed from that curved line, which she follows with her brown pencil, being sure that she does not lay it on too heavy and taking every care to give the exact line that beauty demands. Perhaps she may with a dark blue pencil draw a line under her eyes, but a well bred woman is not eager to do this, as "lining" the face is difficult, and my lady prefers to achieve success. Look well! Why she does not look like the same old faded girl, small-eyed woman, who, chatting so cheerily, sat down in the chair before the mirror a few minutes ago.

You look at the innumerable shades of beautiful red glass on her dressing table, and being a bit curious, you inquire as to what they are. The first bottle that you pick up has such a suggest color that you recognize it at once as diluted spirits of ammonia. What is it there for? My lady laughs and tells you that sometimes when she is shivering just a great deal her appetite gets the better of her, and then--well, then her nose gets a little red, and, in addition to diluting for awhile, she dabbles the offending member every night with the tip of the ammonia bottle. It is restored to its normal condition. Another bottle, once the stopper is removed, gives forth the odor of fir bark. It is explained to you that it is the structure of blemish, a few drops of which thrown into the water used for washing the face just enough to make it look like milk, will not only purify the complexion, but will give it a wonderfully exhilarating feeling. Then there is a bottle of myrrh, from which ask my lady if the making up of her face injures her skin. She laughs merrily and says: "That would be impossible, but in winter I believe if anything it does it good, because I never go to sleep with the powder or rouge on my face, and in summer with hot water and soap, every bit of it, because of the steam that forms the foundation. That was a trick that I learned from an actress, who not only understood the art of make-up, but who was able to retain a beautiful skin of the stage that was the envy of every other woman."

By the bye, since the tariff has become so particularly onerous, everybody is looking for a way to get the most out of the money they are spending. The Red Cross Society, for instance, is a very good example of this. It is a society that is doing a great deal of good, and it is a society that is doing it in a very economical way. It is a society that is doing it in a way that is not only economical, but it is also very efficient. It is a society that is doing it in a way that is not only economical, but it is also very efficient. It is a society that is doing it in a way that is not only economical, but it is also very efficient.

Of these four gowns the one that I am thinking of is the one that is made of holotype fabric, which is a very good example of this. It is a society that is doing a great deal of good, and it is a society that is doing it in a very economical way.
