

TRICK OF AN ESQUIMAUX DOG.

One day, in feeding the dogs, I called the whole of them around me, and gave to each in turn a capelin, or small dried fish. To do this fairly, I used to make all the dogs encircle me until every one had received ten of the capelin apiece. Now Barbekark, a very young and shrewd dog, took it into his head that he would play a white man's trick. So every time he received his fish, he would back square out, move a distance of two or three dogs, and force himself in line again, thus receiving double the share of any other dog. But this joke of Barbekark's bespoke too much of the game many men play upon their fellow beings, and, as I noticed it, I determined to check his doggish propensities; still, the cunning, and the singular way in which he evidently watched me, induced a moment's pause in my intentions. Each dog thankfully took his capelin as his turn came round, but Barbekark, finding his share came twice as often as his companions, appeared to shake his tail twice as thankfully as the others. A twinkle in his eyes as they caught mine, seemed to say "Keep dark, these ignorant fellows don't know the game I'm playing. I am confounded hungry!" Seeing my face smiling at his trick, he now commenced making another change, thus getting three portions to each of the other's one. This was enough, and it was now time for me to reverse the order of Barbekark's game, by playing a trick upon him. Accordingly, every time I came to him he got no fish; and although he changed his position rapidly, three times, yet he got nothing. Then, if ever there was a picture of disappointed plans—of envy at misfortune—it was to be found on that dog's countenance as he watched his companions receiving their allowance. Finding he could not succeed by any change of his position, he withdrew from the circle to where I was, and came to me, crowding his way between my legs, and looked up in my face as if to say, "I have been a very bad dog. Forgive me, and Barbekark will cheat his brother dogs no more. Please, sir, give me my share of capelins." I went the rounds three times more, and let him have the fish, as he had shown himself so sagacious and so much like a repentant prodigal dog.—[Captain Hall.]

SOME interesting statistics as to the geographical distribution of health and disease have been published. According to these, the chances of longevity are greatly in favor of the more northerly latitudes. Near the top of the scale are Norway, Sweden, and parts of England. Of cities, Vienna stands the lowest, and the highest is London. A cool or cold climate, near the sea, is the most favorable for longevity. While formerly, one out of every thirty of the population of England, France and Germany, died in each year, now the average is one in forty-five. The chances of life in England have nearly doubled within eighty years.—[Flag.]

It is temper which makes the bliss of home, or disturbs its comfort. The home is in the forbearing nature, in the yielding spirit, in the calm pleasure of a mild disposition, anxious to give and receive happiness.

The highest and lowest ranges of the Thermometer, during the month, in the open air, were

Max. 76° Min. 29°

The amount of snow that fell during the month measured 44 inches, and the amount of snow and rain water measured 540, which is over an half inch of water upon the whole surface. The prospect for plenty of water for irrigation is fair, perhaps to overflowing, as the total amount of snow that has fallen among mountains and canyons, since last November, comes very near 12 feet upon an average.
