

The Gould-Kelly Marriage.

School Day Romance and the Legal Tilts Their Parents Had.

New York, Oct.—Mrs. Edward J. Kelly, widow of the commodore of the New Rochelle Yacht club, said today that it was true that her daughter, Helen Margaret, is to marry Frank Jay Gould, the youngest son of the financier, Jay Gould.

"This is the first public announcement of the engagement," said Mrs. Kelly, "and I am glad to give the pleasant news publicly."

The young folks have known each other nearly all of their lives. Two or three years ago they met after a separation of a short time, during which they had been at school, and, well, the usual thing happened. They fell in love, and now they are to be married.

"They have not been engaged long, but the engagement is not a surprise. Before my husband died, in July, we had talked of the probable result of the apparent attachment of the young folks and he looked with complacency on the marriage of his daughter to the son of his father's old antagonist.

"We have often laughed over the idea of the Gould and Kelly families being so closely united after such long and bitter law suits, but those troubles are past, and the young folks know little about them and care less. When will the wedding occur? Well, nothing has been decided. They may wait for the full period of mourning for Mr. Kelly, or they may be married in the spring. That is unsettled. The young folks are too busy now making love to worry about the date of their wedding."

Miss Kelly is a beautiful young woman. She will be eighteen years old next January. At present she is a guest of Mrs. Edwin Gould at Ardsley. Frank Gould is also stopping there, though he usually comes to town each day for a few hours. Miss Kelly will not return to her home for several days. The bride-to-be was educated in a convent. She was named Helen Marguerite, but when she became older she preferred the name of Margaret, and that is the name by which she is now called.

Young Gould will be twenty-four years of age December 5 next. When he became of age he inherited a fortune of from $100,000 to $120,000 from his father. This fortune has been tremendously increased during the past three years, and he is now worth close to $200,000 and enjoys an income of from $12,000 to $20,000 per week.

Miss Kelly is a granddaughter of Eugene Kelly, the well-known banker. From her father, who died without a will, she will inherit close to $1,000,000. She is just past seventeen years of age, is extremely pretty, as are her mother, and her one sister. The Kelly city home is at No. 17 east Thirty-second street.

Miss Kelly's grandfather was often opposed to Jay Gould in his financial and railroad operations, and their clashes often resulted in law suits. Many of these suits, involving large sums, have not yet been settled, but have descended to the heirs of the two men. The uniting of the families through the marriage of young Gould and Miss Kelly will doubtless end the litigation and result in the compromising of the claims and the withdrawal of the suits.

Edward J. Kelly, the father of the fortunate girl who is to become the young millionaire's bride, died suddenly July 27 last. He was at that time the commodore of the New Rochelle Yacht club, and was preparing to entertain Admiral Schley when he suddenly became ill from gastric hemorrhage and died within a few hours.

His summer home was filled with guests at the time of his death, and he was in good health until fatally stricken. He was only thirty-nine years old and was a member of many clubs. He left three brothers—Eugene, Thomas and Robert. When his widow made application for letters of administration on his estate she said that his fortune would amount to $140,000 in personal property and $100,000 in real estate. These figures were merely tentative. The general impression was that Mr. Kelly was worth at least $250,000, and perhaps much more.

There was a romance in the marriage of Mr. Kelly to the woman who will become the mother-in-law of Frank Gould. He was married in 1882, but the marriage was kept secret until 1883, and then made public through the advertisement of the death of a son. All of Mr. Kelly's friends had supposed he was a bachelor. When the news of his marriage became public Mr. Kelly explained that the affair had been kept secret because of religious differences between him and his wife. He was a Catholic and she was a Protestant. Because of this difference the matter was opposed by Mr. Kelly's father, but previous to his death he became reconciled to the union and was very fond of his handsome daughter-in-law.

Desecrate Milburn House.

Curiosity Hunters Haunt the House Where the President Died.

Milburn house yesterday afternoon was easily a counter attraction to the exposition. Thousands and thousands of people, some walking and some in carriages, passed the place where President McKinley breathed his last, and the constant procession lasted until well on toward nightfall, when darkness made it impossible to see clearly the house which has now passed into the history of the world as the death place of the third martyr President of the United States.

The people who passed that way yesterday wanted something to take back to their homes as souvenirs. They eagerly pounced upon leaves which dropped from the trees in front of the Milburn house; they hunted for pebbles which had been lying nearby, and until the police interfered they plucked leaves from the shrubbery in the yard. From early morning until late at night two policemen were on guard at the house. They were there to protect the property from the eager throng of souvenir seekers. In fact, ever since the ropes which kept back the general public from the Milburn house were removed it has been necessary to have at least one policeman constantly on hand.

There is not a leaf on the ground within fifty feet of the Milburn house. The people have made the services of gardeners unnecessary, so far as the raking of leaves is concerned, and they are glad of an opportunity to do so. One of the policemen who has spent much time at the Milburn house since the President's body was removed, in speaking of the people who have passed there, said yesterday:

"I never saw anything like it. There are thousands every day who just walk up and down in front of this house. Some of them pass it a dozen times. And they all want something to remember it by. Why, one young woman—yes, she was good looking, too—came up to me the other day and, with a smile a man could hardly resist, asked me if I wouldn't give her my handkerchief to remember the Milburn house by. If I'd had a clean one I might have given it up, but they're scarce."

"Just about dusk one evening a fellow with long hair and a ministerial look about him appeared with a big hammer and a cold chisel. I asked him what he wanted. Then he informed me that he had come to get just three bricks out of the Milburn house. He only wanted three. I told that man Mr. Milburn still wanted that house, and he left very much disappointed. He couldn't see why the request should be denied him. And there are others who come out with big knives. They just want a piece from one of the trees. Why, if we ever let one of them start taking away souvenirs of that kind it wouldn't be half a day before the Milburn house and all the grounds surrounding it would be a thing of the past."—Buffalo Express.
