In "The Sunnyside of Broadway," at the Colonial All Next Week.

Organist Tracy Cannon will play prior to the Sunday morning service in the Congregational church, on "Kriegel" by Gibson, a romance, and "Meditations" by Loebe. For the offertory, Mendelssohn's "Spring Song," with Dullman's "March in D" as the postlude.

The All Hollows boys will give Sunday evening a musical program under Prof. Pedersen, in honor of "President's Feast Day." The orchestra, composed of the students includes, four first and four second violins, violin, flute, cornet, clarinet, trombone, stringed bass, drums and piano.

Arthur Pedersen, now studying the violin in New York, had been highly complimented by an offer to play second violin in the Danvers string quartet. The young man, however, has been obliged to decline, as his duties with the New York Philharmonic orchestra practically require all the time he is not engaged in actual study.

Following is the musical service in the First Methodist church for Sunday's services.

Morning-Organ prelude; anthem, "Jesus, Savior, Pilot Me," (Godfrey) Mrs. Davis, Miss Hecker, Mr. Kibbey and choir; offertory, Isaac, selected, Claude Vetterton, postlude.

Evening-Organ prelude; anthem, "Seek ye the Lord," (Roberts) Mrs. Sorenson and choir; offertory, contralto solo, postlude. Choir director, Mrs. William A. Wetzel.

SHARPS AND FLATS

Left the Cook-Pearcy achievements crowd out the memory of other brave deeds, let it not be forgotten that Franz List discovered the piano pedal.

Fritz Schell and the Metropolitan Opera House both deny indignantly the rumor that she is to leave musical comedy and return to grand opera this winter.

The manuscripts offered by composers for the Pulitzer prize of 1909 number thirty-six symphonies, or tone poems, thirty-nine pieces of chamber music, and eight choral pieces, the number of which means a lot of time and energy to be allotted by the judges.

NED ROYLE'S NEW PLAY IS BORN IN CINCINNATI

CINCINNATI, Ohio, Oct. 25.—Cincinnati is honored this week in having been chosen for the first production of the new play by Edwin Milton Royle entitled, "These Are My People." Special interest was felt in the event because it was known that Lieber & Co. had spent a large amount of money in mounting the play and in engaging the cast; also because Mr. Royle, the author, came here to witness the opening rehearsal and, further, because Lieber & Co.'s head man, Mr. Tyler, came with him.

The cast was an ideal one, being headed by H. D. Warner and Allen Crawford, two English artists of high standing, while Frank Campbell, noted the land over for his work in "Atlantic" and "The Virginian," had the part of a really Indian boy. The stage management was in the hands of Hugo Ford, while his wife, Jessie Ford, was entrusted with the role of a young Indian girl.

The first production occurred last night at the Lyric theater. It is too early as yet to say whether or not the play will equal the success of which it is a sequel. The morning papers give enthusiastic praise to the big dramatic situation which closes the third act, but agree that the piece will with Miss Selma Pettor, who soon after became Mrs. Royle. "Friends," by the way, has had a remarkably successful career. First produced in 1892, it has been played almost continuously ever since, and Eugene O'Neill is still starting in it, playing the smaller towns. After "Friends" came "My Wife's Husband," later transformed into the musical comedy, "Marriage Into," in which Marie Cahill was even here last season, and after that "Capt. Impudence" and "The House of Mirth," which secured valuable sketches and a force called "One Plus One Equals Three," which was produced with great success in Salt Lake City but did not take elsewhere. Year before last Mr. Royle wrote what he called "a good failure and my best play," "The Stringed Everlasting." It is a highly symbolic drama and was put out with a good company, headed by Eugene Roberts, but it did not appear to be acceptable just at the time.

GLAD THE WITNESS IT

"To glad I wrote it, though," said Mr. Royle, "it was a very good, whether it took or not."

Mr. Royle is personally known in Cincinnati. When he was playing in "Friends" several years ago he played a week's engagement here, and he and his wife made some acquaintances among people of theatrical interests.

It is said that the new play, "These Are My People," has some elaborate scenic effects. After playing one night here the company will play a week's engagement at Cincinnati, going next to Louisville and St. Louis. But in the near future, just when no one, not even George Tyler, can say, it is hoped to take it into New York.

Music Booming in the West

THE following two-colored view of musical matters in the west, taken from Culture, indicates a feeling something akin to inclination in the breast of the average Salt Lake. The puzzling query propounded by the News some weeks ago—What's the matter with our musical population?—still remains unanswered.

The far west is awakening to its musical possibilities. The city council of Los Angeles has appropriated $20,000 for the support of its municipal bands. Des Moines, Iowa, has subscribed $15,000 for one of its grand opera. From 1900 to 1909 people have listened to the works of the great masters nightly during the last summer in Denver's parks, and that city is willing to give $100,000 for two weeks of musical luxury. Denver doesn't like the idea of Kansas City drawing on her population for the support of grand opera in the latter city. The Colorado capital has entered $12,000 into her bank vaults as a result of the last Democratic national convention. If a national political convention can loosen the purse strings of the west, Lincoln, Grand Junction, Albuquerque, Trinidad and Salt Lake

THE HOMING SENSE IN BIRDS.

The question as to whether animals have a special homing sense can never be answered by experiments upon the homing pigeon. It was this thought which led me to make a study of distant orientation in two species of tropical birds which are found upon Bird Key—little deserted islands of coral about 200 yards in diameter lying in the middle of the Gulf of Mexico. This key is a member of the Dry Tortugas group of islands due west from Fort Key, New York. The birds in question are the jays and jays, belonging to the gull family, and not differing much in general size from the homing pigeon. In the fall and winter months they come to the islands in great numbers, and on the first day of May, almost to the day, about 10,000 to 20,000 of them migrate to Bird Key, and remain there for the nesting season. Bird Key is thus the northern limit of migration. A study of their habits shows that they do not go over the water in their search for food, but that they are able to find their way to the island from a distance of 15 to 18 miles, consequently, any distance north of Bird Key greater than this would take the birds into an unknown territory. Here, if anywhere, they have a natural aptitude for carrying out experiments upon distant orientation. We can send birds out over an ocean highway or we can send them inland. My experiments have not been carried very far at the present time, but they have already progressed far enough to give some really astonishing results.

After the eggs were laid, the male and female birds take turns in incubating, and one bird is always to be found in the nest. At this time the birds are held and can be captured easily. After being captured, they are marked individually with large strokes of different colored oil paints. These markings can be so varied that each bird sent out has a different marking. The nest is then tagged, showing the time of the bird's capture. On the early morning of June 15, 1909, birds were put into a large incense cage and given into the charge of Dr. H. E. Jordan, who was returning to New York. He carried the birds via the government tug, the Key West. There food was purchased for them (small minnows). A 3 o'clock in the morning of Friday, the 19th, Dr. Jordan boarded the Mahary boat, leaving Key West at that time for New York. On board the boat the birds (which were carried in the hold of the vessel) were both watered and fed. On Sunday, the 21st, at 2 in the morning, the birds were released at latitude 25 degrees, longitude 75 degrees, 10 minutes (approximately 12 miles east of Cape Hatteras). The wind was fair and fresh for several days after the birds were released. I kept their nests under constant observation, but had almost given up hope of their return, when, by my surprise, on June 21, at 8:30 in the morning, I found two of the marked birds upon their respective nests. The nest mates of the other three birds had taken new nest mates, consequently, had the marked birds returned they would have been unable to obtain possession of the nest. A few days later I by chance observed one of the marked birds attempting to alight at its own nest. It was immediately driven away. Three of the five birds are thus known to have returned. I have little doubt that the other two birds also returned. The distance in a straight line from Hatteras to Bird Key is approximately 150 miles. The glongshore route is about 160 miles. The latter is the route in all probability chosen by the birds, since by studying their habits I found that they do not fly at night, but only rest upon the water, and yet are dependent upon the ocean for their food and water.

THE DISTANCE WAS COVERED IN A LITTLE LESS THAN SIX DAYS.—Prof. John D. Watson, in Harper's Magazine.

An Entertainer for Any Function

Think of being able to play Beethoven's Moonlight Sonata as you would like to play it before your guests.

Think of being able to make the melody sing its sad and touching theme, and a subdued accompaniment the while.

Think of being able to perform any composition in the manner in which your mood dictates—without the least preparatory study—with no previous musical education or experience.

That's what you can do with the Cecilian Player Piano, and that's something you can't do with most every other Player Piano.

For the reason first that most Player Pianos have not the perfection of construction of the Cecilian Player Piano—and second, for the reason that if a Player Piano can be made to do these things you must be an expert performer with an extensive experience with all sorts of levers—stops—character, in order to make them.
