FREDERICK DEAD.

THE prolonged and fearful struggle which Emperor Frederick has maintained against the arch and all-conquering enemy of the race, is over at last, and the civilized world will heave a sign of relief at the announcement, so great has been the tension of sympathy in his behalf. The calmness, fertitude and fixed determination with which he has so long held at arm's length the dark messenger, have excited universal admiration, while hope that he might survive the malady with which he was afflicted, struggled against the declarations of science that he could not live. The picture of which he was the central figure, has been an impressive and pathetic one. A loving wife and children, hoping against hope; skilful surgeons, lancet and appliances in hand, calculating, with scientific deliberation, how the spark of life might be retained in the feeble frame an hour longer; high state officials having audience with the dying but resolute Emperor, while he for a few moments at a time, would raise his eyes from the scroll before him, whereon was written the organic law of his country, and the bulwark of the liberties of his people, which he was intent upon perfecting before surrendering to the forces of Death; these were the striking figures and groupings of that touching and emotional scene which the German court has, for months, presented to the world. In the background of the portrayal are seen, in crouching and suspicious attitudes, the foes of Fatherland, and conspirators against its peace, waiting to make a spring at an opportune moment, which they look to come with the death of the nation's head. The royal life now brought to a close has been worthy of a king's son and heir; it has been the career of a soldier, statesman and hero. Frederick-William was born October 18, 1831, William was born October 18, 1831, and hence was aged nearly 57 years. He was the son of William, who, at punishment for murders committed He was the son of William, who, at the time of Frederick's birth, was the Duke of Brandenburg, and whose spouse was Augusta, nee Duchess of Weimar; but who, in 1833, became King of Prussia, and in 1871, Emperor of Germany.

At a very early age the Prince gave evidence of possessing a strong character and marked talents, for the dance and development of which the best masters were employed. After a thorough course of instruction under private tutors, he entered the university of Bonn, where he graduated in law. His education was made complete, and such as was deemed appropriate to his station, and the probabilities of the future which was opening before him. His after life and accomplishments vindicated the wisdom of the course pursued in his early

On the conclusion of his studies he spent a considerable period in foreign travel. Among the countries which he visited was England, and during his | with the execution of the Chicago anfor the Princess Royal, Victoria, eldest daughter of Queen Victoria. The attachment was mutual, and resulted in the marriage of the distinguished pair, January 25, 1838. The union is generally understood to have been a genuine love match, and was attended with the warmest approval of both Prussia and England, being regarded as a desirable and fortunate tie between those nations. A thorough military training had been a part of Frederick's education, and had served to develop conspicuous qualities of generalship. While still young he was an important of icer in the Prussian army, and in the war with Austria, in 1866, was given command of what is called in the history of the campaign, the third army, comprising the left division of the Prussian forces. That this impor tant command had been vested in the right man, was proven by his magnificent generalship at Koniggratz. The credit of having saved the Prussian forces from an overwhelming defeat in that battle has been accorded by military authorities to Prince Frederick William.

In the Franco-German war he commanded the troops of three German states, Bavaria, Wurtemberg and Baden. At the battle of Sedan, Aug. 31, 1870, which resulted in the defeat of McMahon, and the ignominious surrender of Napoleon III, he commanded the German forces, and for his brilliant victory he was, in October following, made a field-marshal.

After the ascension of his father to the imperial throne, he rendered important assistance in the affilrs of state. His brother, Frederick Charles, has eclipsed him as a general, but not as a Statesman. In the latter calling he has proven himself worthy to associate even with a Bismarck. It is known that he was averse to a harsh policy in the treatment of the Socialist nestion, and that he has been anxious o perfect the German constitution. To this last great labor he dedicated his dying energies, and his efforts in the interest of popular liberty have tenderly endeared him to his subjects. The malady from which he suffered Various plans have been proposed to insure a painless death without disfigurement of the body, the essentials being perfect contact with the electrodes, the arms of a chair, for example, and a current of great electro-motive force, such as is used in arc lighting. Execution by electric shock has often been proposed, but New York is the first State to provide for it by enactment. The ex-periment will be closely watched by the country at large.

It is in the interest of humanity and genuine civilization that such horrible scenes as those connected for instance pours there he formed an attachment archists should be abolished, the victims on that occasion having been literally choked to death. The doctor operated on several hundred cross-eves during his visit witness sald these rates vary nearly every minute.

John S. Wilson, freight traffic agent of the Pennsylvania Railroad, was the next witness. He said his company delivers grain from the cars into the holds of vessels. By shipping directly into the vessels, his company saved 60 cents a hundred. He admitted that during the demoralization of rates the Pennsylvania road allowed the Inman Steamship line 50 per cent on through rates. Wilson said that within the past seventy-two hours he had rehundred cross-eyes during his visit last year to California and Nevada, and in no case required over one minute to perform the operation, and in some cases straightened cross-eyes in fifteen rates. Wilson said that within the past seventy-two hours he had received information that through rates from Chicago by the way of Boston was less than the export rates from Boston. He admitted that this company charged more for carrying the same commodity to New York than it did for shipment to Liverpool.

Mr. McVeagh then laid before the commission his side of the case. They had to compete with all water routes over which the commission had no control. He wished a proportionate rate for export fixed.
