THE POULTRY SHOW.

To the Editor:

The seventeenth annual exhibition of thoroughbred poultry is being held this week at 35-37 east First South this week at as a least pirst south street, this city. This event, so full of interest to the fancier of nice looking poultry, offers some suggestions that are worth much to the general public. First, what good is this lot of thoroughbreds to the state? second, who gots the benefit of them? third, where does it come from? In answer to the first quescome from? In answer to the first ques-tion, I will ask, what good are thor-oughbred horses or cattle or sheep or any other class of this kind? Does the raiser of Durham cattle think a Jersey is as good for beef as his Dur-ham? No. Does he expect as much milk and butter as the Jersey pro-duces? Why, no. But he does expect and gets a better class of meat when they go to the block. Likewise the breeder of the Jersey knows his stock produces the profits in the milk pall, and both classes of breeders know their respective kinds are better and their respective kinds are better and more profitable than mongrels or mixed breeds for either purpose. The poultry stands the same in the world, any of the thoroughbred breeds are ahead of the thoroughbred breeds are ahead of the mongrel or crossed breeds as pro-ducers of eggs or dressed fowls for the market. I challenge the breeder of mongrel poultry to produce a flock of layers as good as the best flocks of thoroughbred fowls. I realize that many people will say, Well, my neigh-bor has a flock of these boasted thoroughbreds, and my old bunch of "Just chickens" beats them all to pieces laying. They have told me these things so much that they sometimes cause me to feel sorry for the breeders of such stock.

Make a comparison in this way. I now of many a mongrel cow that Make a comparison in this way. I know of many a mongrel cow that beats her neighbor giving milk, al-though the neighbor is a thoroughbred. Have you considered the cause of it? You can take the best Jersey cow you know and a just medium mongrel, and let them both size out in the cold dursnow and a just medium mongrel, and let them both stay out in the cold dur-ing the whiter, give them just enough hay to keep the mongrel alive, and I just bet the Jersey will die from neg-lect. Of course the mongrel is the best (?), Just reverse the case. Give them a warm stable, plenty of good, wholesome feed, and the Jersey will wholesome feed, and the Jersey will doubly discount the other. The reason is obvious. One has been bred and reared to produce the butter and milk, and through long lines of ancestry has come to that condition that the more food you can get her to eat, the more butter and milk she will give. The other was just bred; that's all! So with the thoroughbred fowls. Give them intelligent care and there will be no shortage in the egg crop that will wholesome feed, and the Jersey will no shortage in the egg crop that will drag down the average yield so low as to compare with the best efforts of the best flocks of mongrel or cross-bred fowls. Anyone can do well with fowls if they will study how, and to anyone who does not know what to do to secure a good crop of eggs when prices are high, I would suggest they subscribe for a bood poultry paper. But in my own work I have followed mainly the teachings of the first men-tioned. But when once started in the poultry business, don't neglect it, or you will surely be disappointed, and unless you have a positive liking for fowls, let the poultry business alone, unless you have sufficient means to go at it on a large enough scale to hire the work done by someone who does like it.
