ernacle made the party somewhat late in reaching Senator Kearns' mansion for breakfast. The president's carriage rolled up South Temple street at a rapid rate, and he and the other visitors were at once received by Mrs.

Kearns. The beautiful mansion was a perfect bower of flowers. On the big table in the diningroom an immense cluster of American Beauty roses shed a delightful fragrance throughout the room. Only a short time was spent in handshaking, and then the party was seated, President Roosevelt occupying one end of the table, and Senator Kearns and Mrs. Gov, Weils the other, and Secretaries Moody and Wilson and Becretary Loeb having prominent places. The other guests in attendance were: Bishop Scanlan, Bishop Leonard and wife, President Joseph F. Smith and wife, Senator Reed Smoot and wife, Hon. David Keith and wife, Judge Bartch, Congressman Howell and wife,

Perry Heath and wife, and William Igleheart and wife. The menu was of the most elegant character, and the various dishes were, of course, served in the most tasteful and handsome style. No speeches were indulged in, but the party resolved it-crowd was kept well in hand by the po ice. In the depot yard a small pany of soldiers was grouped, formage pany of soldiers was grouped, forming a lane of sentinels from the street down to the steps of the president's Pullman car. The president's carriage drove rapidly in the yard, and he no sooner dismounted than the crowd set to cheering. The Deseret News special edition in The Desert News special edition in honor of the president, issued last night, was gobbled up as fast as it came off the press, and few copies could be found by nightfall. A bundle of the papers, sent with the compli-ments of the "News," was handed the president at Ogden.

DOTS AND DASHES.

It was a gala day for the children. This is a day long to be remembered by the people of Salt Lake. Josh Davis was out in his Chinese uniform. He escaped the eye of the president, however. The top of the Keith building on East Temple street furnished a good place for many people to see the president, president remaining in view, waving leaving the reviewing stand. In the midst of the bustling crowd clamoring to shake hands with the distinguished visitor the latter renarked: "I can't shake hands with all of you but, (espying a little tot who or you but, (espying a little tot who was standing near) "here is one I mugt shake hands with." Then the president picked up the child and shook her fondly. It proved to be little Bessie Anderson, daughter of Hon. James H. Anderson, with whom President Roose-velt is personally acquainted.

Councilman A. J. Davis, in speaking today of the decorations, said that he was in St. Louis, Detroit. Los Angeles and San Francisco at the time the presi-dent visited those cities and that the display of flags, bunting and decorations enerally was not nearly so good an in ur own city today.

TABERNACLE NOTES.

The first big cheer that went up from The brist big cheer that went up from the audience was when Presidents Smith, Winder and Lund entered the building and took their places on the corner of the platform. The cheers were redoubled later when Senator Smoot conducted the First Presidency and Hon John Henry Smith across the and Hon. John Henry Smith across th platform to the president's seat and when he arose and gave them all a learty grasp of the hand.

Another event that was the signal for a big burst of applause was the illumin-ation of the figure of President Roosevelt painted on a big banner which hung in front of the organ. A light back of the figure was thrown up at a signal and the effect was very fine.

The greatest burst of applause heard luring the day probably came after secy. Moody's announcement that if Congress, with the help of our three congress, with the help of our three members, gave him five new warships next session, he would do all he could to see that one of them was named "Utah."

The president led the applause that ollowed Miss Ramsey's rendition of The Flag Without a Stain." He quite Insisted on her returning to the plat-form to sing the second verse over again, and at the conclusion he arose and shook hands with the Utah singer, at which the audience shook the building with its cheers.

The president's voice during his speech was pitched in a high, tense key. He made frequent gestures to illustrate points and he always "brought down house" when he wanted to score a bleasantry, by an odd trick of ending with a rising inflection, something after the fash on of the actor Stuart Robson. He looks very much like his newspaper and magazine portraits, and the prom-inence of his teeth has not been at all exaggerated.

The delightful informality that exists in the president's official family was shown by the running fire of com-
