DESERET EVENING NEWS SATURDAY DECEMBER 29 1906

ARNES looked at the two cablegrams again. The first one, from Paris, informed him that the celebrated Versailles sapphires, set in a splendid necklace, had been stolen; the second was a notification that Bill Snyder, smuggler, had sailed from Cherbourg on the Sylvania. Naturally the chief had put the two shreds together and expected to pull off the trick without a struggle.

But the Sylvania had arrived and Snyder was not on the passenger list. No sapphires had been declared, and the examination of the baggage, now almost completed, disclosed no gems. Barnes bit his lips vexatiously. The Versailles sapphires were numbered among the wrold's greatest gems. The thought of permitting them to slip through his fingers was maddening. At one time they had ranked with the state jewels of France. Their distinction came not so much through their value -although that was more than $20,000 -as from their perfection. The cut was the finest ever turned out by a lapidary. They were known to gem experts as the Blue Cornflower. The cut of each stone made an opalescent star of six rays, which, held in a certain light, glittered like pure dia-monds. There were forty perfect stones in the necklace, none less than a carat and a half.

Barnes determined to make a second tour of the boat, and in the course of his wanderings came within the rays of a pair of piercing black eyes. The owner of the bright orbs raised a small white manicured hand, very much be-ringed, and drew it across a narrow The next moment the same chead. forceneral. The next moment the same hand wearily stroked a luxuriant black mustache, betraying, by the move-ment, two rows of even, white, glisten-ing teeth. He was one of a little group, which, besides himself, included a young man and a young woman and young man and a young woman and a young man and a young woman and an elderly person who might have been —as she was—the aunt of the girl. Barnes quickly learned, through the captain of the boat, that the stout, elderly person was Mrs. Harrington, a widow, with a comfortable income, whose consuming ambition was to wed her niece, Elsie, to a title. The young man was John Hasson, a strong limbed, clean faced American lawyer. The clean faced American lawyer. The man with the plercing black eyes was addressed as the Count de Vontain. Sea voyages are conducive to quick intimacles. Hence the captain of the Sylvania was able to tell many things to the chief of the customs. The most entertaining was the fact that the nost entertaining was the fact that the no-bleman and the lawyer were keen ri-vals for the affections of Elsie Har-rington. It did not require second sight to discover that the girl loved the American, and that the count was the aunt's choice. Indeed she had taken the girl abroad a year befors in the hope of breaking off the attachment with Hasson, but fate or the per-sistence and ingenuity of a love smit-ten young man had decreed that the two should return to the United States on the same vessel. After learning these things, Barnes devoted his attention exclusively to the little party. The girl was unmistak-ably beautiful. She was tall and slender, with great brown eyes and a whimsical droop of the mouth, which looked as if it might, instantaneously, turn either to sadness or to laughter. Hasson gazed at her with a look of adoration. The older woman and the adoration. The older woman and the count stepped aside for a moment. Im-mediately the young man grasped the girl by the hand. 'Elsie!" he exclaimed, with a signifi-

TORY of the SMUGGLED SAPPHIRES & his cloak and turn the sapphires over to Crompton." "Was there a struggle?"

"Yes," replied Clancy, modestly: "but it was one sided. Crompton has ai-ready been turned over to the United States district attorney." "What does this mean" cried Mrs. Harrington, unable to suppress herself

Harrington, unable to suppress hereit "It means," said Barnes sternly, "that your social ambition has made you the credulous victim of a scoun-drel. This man has been using you and your niece for his own base pur-poses. He has forced those counter-feit gems on you to deflect suspicion from himself and to enable him to es-cape with the real sapphires." "Counterfeit!" gasped the woman. She gazed fixedly at the count, but he did not return her glance. He seemed bored. A small, white, mani-cured hand, very much be-ringed, was raised languidly and drawn across a narrow forchead. The next moment, the same hand wearily stroked a lux-uriant black musiache, betraying by the movement two rows of even, white, glistening teeth.

glistening teeth. "Counterfeit!" gasped the woman

"Counterfeit!" gasped the woman for the second time. "Yes, counterfeit!" cried the chief, his volce rising with his indignation. "The man himself is a counterfeit. He's no Frenchman. He has no chat-eau; he's no count. The cables have been working and I find the title he claims is extinct. Stripped of his Par-islan top hat his Parisian cloak and his Parisian manner, you'll find him to be, as I've found him to be—after plecing my bits of information together—plain "Bill' Snyder, the best dressed, the best groomed and the most ingenious pro-fessional smuggler of the present gen-cration."

eration."
"What'd you bring me here for?"
asked the erstwhile count, yawning.
"To humiliate you before these ladies
—If such a thing's possible—as you've already humiliated them," thundered
the chief. "As for the rest, the law will give you all that's coming to you."
Five minutes later the prisoner, still languidly stroking his mustache, was in a carriage with the officers on his way to prison. The appraiser entered at this juncture and was invited to join Clancy and the chief in taking the Versailles sapphires to a place of safety.

Versailles sapphires to a place of safety. Mrs. Harrington was in a state of collapse. Every vestige of her normally aggressive manner disappeared. She looked at the chief imploringly: "We will be disgraced!" she cried. "The story of how I was duped by this impostor will make us the laughing stock of society." The chief walked over and placed his hand gently on her shoulder. He looked in the direction of John Hasson, who held his arm protectingly about Elsie.

held his arm protectingly about Elsie, and his face softened.

and his face soltened. "Are you reconciled to that?" he asked, pointing to the happy couple. She nodded her head. "Then," he said, stoutly, "I'll never give, the newspapers the real story of the attempt to snuggle the Versailles samphires."

sapphires." And later on, when the reporters visited him, he lied like a gentleman.

EXPOSURE.

To cold draughts of air, to keen and cutting winds, sudden changes of the temperature, scanty clothing, undue expo-sure of the throat and neck after public speaking and singing, bring on coughs and colds. Ballard's Horehound Syrup is the best cure. Mrs. A. Barr, Houston, Tex., writes, Jan. 31, 1902: "One bottle of Ballard's Horehound Syrup cured me of a very bad cough. It is very pleasant to take. Sold by Z. C. M. I. Drug Dept., 112 and 114 South Main Street.

First and Foremost In the field of medicine is Hood's Sar-saparilla. It possesses actual and un-equaled merit by which it cures all diseases caused or promoted by impure cant squeeze. Her white face crimsoned; the droop-g mouth suggested joy. "Please don't, John; not here!" she cried. Mrs. Harrington returned with the

Mrs. Harrington returned with the count. Elsie and John discreetly gazed into space. The count looked furried. He wore the fashionable trimmed cloak and the high silk hat with flat brim popularly associated with Eranohuman of the bicker class. He he Frenchmen of the higher class. He be gan to talk with the aunt in animated In the meantime Barnes had been attending to routine business, keeping the group in sight, always. Presently he summoned Con Clancy, his assitant, to his side. "Have the count and the ladies made out their papers?"

"Yes." "Did they declare any gems?"

'Ne

"Make the investigation of their bag-gage rigid. After that make a care-ful examination of the count's state-

The buzz of expectation was everywhere. This thought of home caused the travellers to bubble over with eager the travellers to bubble over with eager good humor. The ship's officers ran about hurriedly, performing the last civilities to those who had been their guests for more than six days. The chief was standing on a little plat-form directing the disposition of the luggage, when some one grasped the sleeve of his coat. He looked around. The count was by his side, his small eves exuding indignation. stance. The look of triumph that flashed across his face told its own story. Versailles sapphires!

"You are the chief inspector?" he queried in marvellously good English. "I have that honor," was the bland reply. "Well," continued the other hurriedly, "your men are flinging the things out of our trunks."

"Not flinging, surely?" with a little laugh.

laugh. "Well, emptying 'em out." "That's why they're here," was the good natured rejoinder. "But." protestingly, "this sort of ex-amination is most unusual: the bag-gage is always examined without tak-ing it out of the trunks." "Not always." corrected the chief. "To this togenoe we hope to expedite

"In this instance we hope to expedite your landing by finishing the work in Prince of Pollteness. "Your aunt has forgotten to declare some gems. You will come with me to my office on the dock and the business will be guletly a systematic manner." "Oh," said the count, disappointed-ly, "Then the men have been ordered adjusted. ly. "Then to do this?" older woman, recovering herself. But the chief cut her short. "It is," he observed, "and I'm sorry you attempted it."

to do this?" "Yes," said Barnes, with a queer look. Then very slowly, "Count, this isn't your first voyage over." "How do you know?" angrily asked the man, his face flushing. "Because," ironically, "you're so well posted on American customs business." The count made no reply to this thrust, but irritably stalked away. The Sylvania's deck was crowded with friends and relatives of the re-turning tourists. Waving handkerwith friends and relatives of the re-turning tourists. Waving handker-chiefs brightened the scene: shouts of recognition floated across the roped off portion of the pier. Clancy approached the chief, who was absently listening to the complaint of a passenger who could not locate his trunk. Barnes instantly stepped aside to hear from his assistant. Clancy wasted no time in preliminaries. "It's no use." he exclaimed in a whis-pered voice. "I can't find the sap-phires T're searched everywhere."

pered voice. "I can't find the phires. I've searched everywhere.

After they had been scatted the chief gently released the sapphires from Mrs. Harrington's neck and laid them on his desk. They answered perfectly the description of the Ver-sailles sapphires. There were 40 of the stones, all cut with the ex-quisite art of the skilled lapidary. Mrs, Harrington sat silent, with the look of injured dignity common to those who violate the customs laws. The eirl buried her face in her hands. "And the stateroom; you didn't for-get that" reminded the chief, speaking to the inspector, but gazing in tently in the direction of Count de Vontaine and the ladies. " replied Clancy. "I didn't forget

"No," replied Clancy. "I didn't forget anything." The chief did not appear to hear this reply. He was still watching the little group only a few yards away. Mrs. Harrington was standing alone. She held a fur lined coat over her left arm. He made a profound bow to the wo-man, and without any explanation whatever took the coat from her arm. She looked at him amazed, and was OPENED IT AND DREW OUT A MAGNIFICENT SAPPHIRE NECKLACE THE CHIEF "Thank you," she said, gratified at his condescending manner. "Come, Elsie."

stant

evening.

"Don't care

sailles sapphires.

pause:-

over.

with joy.

of this seizure.

Why?"

The appraiser gasped for breath.

Positively, you don't suppose I've earned a reputation as a gem expert for nothing, do you? My suspicions were aroused at the start. My magnifying glass con-firmed them. Oxide of cobalt has been ably cost $80 or $90 to make 'em so perfect looking." "Quite a difference from $20,000," grinned the appraiser, adding, after a

It was about half-past nine that night when the chief was ushered into

Mrs. Harrington's exquisitely appoint.

ed apartments at the New Amsterdam. The bogus gems reposed on Mrs. Har-

"The count failed to keep his appoint-nt." said Mrs. Harrington stiffly.

pointment over this catastrophe.

"But what about the originals?"

used to color those imitations." "But the sparkle?"

'Then they're worthless?'

"Are you sure?" he asked finally. "Positively. You don't suppos opportunity may come later. Now if you will all step aside for a moment. I should like to speak to Mrs. Har-rington alone." about to expostulate, when he said in his softest volce: "Permit me to assist you on with this coat will be no public exposure.

"What's the matter?"

stantly

harshly:

haps"- side.

Elsie, happening to glance that way, noticed her aunt's agitation. She

"Nothing, madam," replied the chief, with the easy manner which had won for him in the service the title of the

"This is outrageous," began the Clancy was at his very heels.

little office near the end of the wharf, After they had been seated the chief gently released the sapphires

She had not requested his assistance 'But I'-"It's necessary," said the chief, with did not desire it, and was going to say so, but the masterful look in the man's "It's necessary, said the chief, with that compelling wave of the hand. "Now Mis. Harrington," said Barnes, when the others had obeyed, "all I will say is that you should make a full, eyes checked the protest on her lip She held out her arms obediently. H He slipped the coat on easily until it reached the nape of her neck. At that point he paused and deliberately raisfrank and explicit statement." It took her some time to get her courage screwed up to the sticking point. Finally, half tearfully, she collar that covered her dress and hung around her neck and shoulders. His hand struck a hard, glittering sub-stance. The look of triumph that burst out: "The dear count gave them to me." "The dear count, ch?" mimicked arnes. "Do you know the value of Barnes.

"I haven't the faintest idea," she said. "I will be frank and tell you I only know the count is desperately in love with Elsie, and I have tried to help his suit. He is to be our guest use the court of the start o Mrs, Harrington was wearing the No words were spoken, but at the very instant he discovered the neck-lace she realized what had happened. in the city. Just before the customs officers came aboard, in a burst of The natural pallor of her countenance became intensified. A half sob escapgratitude, he bade me wear the sap-phires, as a little souvenir of my kindness to him. I naturally felt flather. The next instant she looked up, her gray eyes filled with fright The chief was equal to the occasion. "You needn't be frightened; there never get those sapphires again.' "I don't care." "Didn't you know they were dutitered. able ole?" Barnes asked, sternly. "I wasn't sure. I thought a present-a thing you wore"-"But you tried to conceal them under your lace collar." "The government hasn't any right" -she began angrily, and then stopped short, her face as red as a rose. All the time they were speaking the chief had his eyes on the sapphires, which lay on the desk before him. He now examined them critically by He now examined them critically by means of a little magnifying glass he had pulled from a drawer of his desk. As he took the instrument from his eye he smiled in an enigmatic man-ner. He was about to speak when the door burst open suddenly and John Hasson bolted into the room.

The count came up at this moment, and when he saw what had happened his gimletlike eyes appeared to be almost turning in their sockets. In-'Elsie!" he shouted at sight of the girl again. "John!" she cried with unmistaky Barnes called Clancy to his There was a whispered conable delight. They would have been 4n each versation. As it was concluded the count disappeared in the crowd. others' arms had not Mrs. Harrington arisen and interposed, "Stop!" she exclaimed angrily. "Come right this way, ladics." And the chief led the two women to the

The young lawyer retreated before his natural enemy. The girl looked at her aunt defiantly, What would Count de Vontain say?" she queried, turning to Elsie. "I don't know, and I don't care," cried the girl passionately. 'We're not in France now; we're in the United States. "Bravo!" whispered the chief in her ear. "Sir!" said the aunt, turning to Barnes, "I trust you will not detain us any longer." "Where is the count?" asked the chief.

girl buried her face in her hands, weeping. The appraiser, who had entered in the meantime, looked at "The count," replied Mrs. Harring-ton with some dignity, "has an en-gagement to dine with us at 8 o'clock the gens listlessly. Later he would be called upon for his official opinion. Presently the older woman spoka this evening.

"Madam," said the chief, bowing ironically, "I can assure you that the government would not think of inter-"Now if you are quite done, per-the receiver and called up the custom house "Is that you, Con?" he asked.

"I go on one condition." said Eiste The reply must have been in the af-firmative, for he immediately followed with another question :---

"Can you get into communication with Count de Vontain?"

"I go on one condition." said Elsie stoutly, and it is that John—that Mr. Hasson—shall dine with us." The aunt was about to break out in a rage, but she relented, as if mak-ing the best of a bad situation. "All right." she said doggedly. As they were leaving 'the ambitious woman sighed heavily. "The count will be disappointed at seeing me without the sapphires." The chief was on his feet in an in-Those in the room heard a mumbling sound come over the wire. "Well," continued the chief, "tell him he's committed an unpardonable mense. He's kept two American lalies waiting. That may be permissible in France, but we'll not tolerate it here. The chief was on his feet in an in-

Bring the count to the New Amster-lam at once." 'My dear madam." he said in his softest tones, "if it is of any moment you can take the sapphires with you, During the next 20 minutes the chief charmed the ladies with the extent and variety of his conversation. Anceand I will call for them later in the dotes flowed from his lips like crys-tal water from an everlasting spring. "Thank you very much," she said, with the first eign of graciousness she had shown. "I will avail myself of your kind offer." to interested did they become that they So interested did they become that they almost forgot the existence of Count de Vontain. It was Mrs. Harrington who reverted to the painful topic of the sapphires. The chief was profuse "Are you going mad?" cried the ap-praiser, turning to Barnes after the little party had left the room. "You'll never get these asymptotes and the second the sapphires.

in his protestations :-"No legal censure can attach to you, ladies," he concluded.

"But the dear count?" inquired the "Because," said the chief, speaking older woman. deliberately, "those stones are hogus; "The dear older woman. "The dear count," said the chief, grimly, looking at his watch, "is a very they're a cheap imitation of the Veranpunctual man." At that moment a scuffling sound was heard on the stairway; the door opened and a man entered in the cus-tody of two customs officers. His clothing was disarranged and he ghowed to disadvantage. He scowled fiercely at Barnes, but refused to notice the other occupants of the room Cornelius Clancy, who brought up the rear of this strange group, saluted his chief

"Has been produced by the discreet use of bichromate of potassium." "The count!" gasped Mrs. Harring-"Well, I shouldn't say that. It prob-

"Did you get the gems?" asked Barnes eagerly, not noticing this salu-"We did," said the little man, with a broad grin. "Where were they?"

"He had 'em sewed up in the lining of his cloak.

"Meet me at the New Amsterdam at 10 tonight," replied the chief signifi-Where are they?" and you may get the sequel

Clancy advanced and laid a long nar-row box on the table in front of Barnes. The chief opened it and drew out a magnificent sapphire necklace. The 40 superbly cut stones scintillated beneath the bright rays of the incan-descent lights. Mrs. Harrington, Elsie cod Harson involuniarily closed in The bogus geins reposed on Mrs. Har-rington's ample bosom. Elsle was in splendid spirits. The presence of Hasson evidently helped to drive the pallor from her cheeks. Hasson s-ened half defiant. Mrs. Harrington looked uncomfortable. and Hasson involuntarily closed in around the chief. The moment the older woman saw the sapphires her gaze reverted to the other set hanging about her neck and her emotions found vent in a piercing scream. Elsie was too much astonished for words and "Where's the count?" queried the chief after the first greetings were Hasson looked on in amazement.

"Tell me your story," said the chief addressing Clancy and ignoring the inquiring glances about him.

ment," said Mrs. Harrington stilling. No one appeared to share her disap-"We followed your instructions liter-"We followed your instructions inter-ally," replied the man, "and didn't per-mit him to get out of our sight for a second. The crisis came when he en-tered the office of Crompton, the gem broker. I posted an officer in the front and one in the rear of the place and Without waiting for a reply he lifted then entered in time to see him rip open or impoverished blood. If you have rheumatism, dyspepsia, scrofula or ca-tarrh you may take Hood's Sarsaparilla and ha cured. If and be cured. If you are run down and feel weak and tired, you may be sure it will do you good. The favorite family cathartic is Hood's Pills.

REDUCED RATES

For Christmas Holidays.

Via Oregon Short Line. Tickets on sale December 20, 21, 22, 24, 25, and 31, and January 1, 1907, final limit January 7th, 1907. See agents for further par-ticulars. City Ticket Office, 201 Main Dr Broadbent, Dentist, 500-501 Scott building, 168 Main.

Better than Any Other Coffee at the Same Price

The largest exclusive coffee roasters in the world import this coffee direct, blend it, roast it and pack it in full weight sanitary packages.

Think of the profits saved by this direct dealing. This saving is put into the extra quality of McLaughlin's XXXX Coffee, and you get the benefit.

The handy air-tight package and the glazing of pure sugar keeps this coffee clean and fresh-protected from dust, dirt (2) and foul odors.

> McLaughlin', 'XXX Coffee is Sold by All Good Dealers.

deed, Elsie and John, by a species of wireless telegraphy, were exchanging glances which were distinctly charged 'May I use your telephone?" asked Barnes.

The chief silenced her, sternly but politely.

"Not now, Mrs. Harrington. Your

