CUSTER ON McCLELLAN — IT MIGHT HAVE BEEN.

GENERAL Custer, in the Galaxy, has a good word for General McClellan, who has been in the shade since the beginning of the late war. General Custer credits McClellan with the organization and discipline of the army of the Potomac, and states that he was a soldier, "whose mental training and abilities were of a higher order, and whose military qualifications and knowledge were superior to those possessed by any officer who subsequently led the Army of the Potomac to battle."

Custer claims that McClellan lacked experience in large commands, which those who followed him possessed, growing out of the progress of the war, yet he was so nobly endowed by nature and education as a leader, that he would have put down the rebellion without difficulty, if nothing had opposed him but the Confederate armies in front, which is a powerful reflection upon somebody at home.

Custer says—

"The defeat of McClellan was not the result of combinations made either in the Confederate capital or in the camp of the Confederate army, but in Washington. It was the result of an opposition whose birth and outgrowth could be traced to the dominating spirits who, at that time, were largely in control of the Federal Government. It was not the open opposition of enemies in his front, but the half hidden interference of foes in his rear, that succeeded in marring the complete success of McClellan's combinations for the suppression of the rebellion."

McClellan himself declared, at the time of the war, to Stanton—

"If I save this army now, I tell you plainly, that I owe no thanks to you or to any other persons in Washington. You have done your best to sacrifice this army."

Custer further says—

"Equally well satisfied am I that he could have suppressed the rebellion, restored peace to the country, and brought back the seceding States in such time and manner as would have shortened the struggle saved to the country, both North and South, the blood of thousands of its best and bravest citizens, and spared the nation a large, if not the greater, portion of the heavy debt now borne as one of the inheritances of the war."

Stick to Your Farms.

The life of a farmer is not an easy one; but when we look around and see the wrecks of fortune made on every hand by men engaged in other pursuits, the farmer has cause to be thankful if he can support his family and give his children a good common education. It has been stated that during the last half century only four merchants, in the city of New York, out of every hundred, have succeeded in making their business profitable. The unsuccessful ones have managed, in many cases, to continue in business for years after they had become bankrupt according to their books; but, of course, finally had to succumb to their fate. These men, while living in good style, and many luxuriously, have carried continually a load of care that no farmer ever experienced; and when the time came that their business must be wound up, their condition generally has been one of poverty and utterly broken down in spirits. A few recover and resume business again; but the majority are pushed aside to make room for others, eventually to follow in their footsteps and end their lives in misery and despair.

Farmers, be contented. You may not be able to lay up money, but if you can pay for your farms and live comfortably, envy not the condition of those engaged in other pursuits. To those farmers who are out of debt and own good farms, need I say that the apparently wealthy bankers of Wall Street might well envy your lot. Nearly every week some one of these firms, owing millions of dollars, explodes, and its members sink into poverty and obscurity, but the farmer who is out of debt owns a bank that can never fail, inasmuch as seedtime and harvest are promised unto the end of time.

A word to farmers' sons. If your fathers own good farms which are not mortgaged, don't all abandon your homes. One of you, at least, should remain to carry on the farm when your father's lease of life has expired. You might possibly do better in some other business, but you had better not risk a change.—New York Observer.

Grasshoppers in Spain.

The southern provinces of Spain are afflicted with a plague of grasshoppers quite equaling that of our own western plains in extent and devastation. For eight or nine years past the evil has been growing, at first developing from insignificant swarms of the insect, and gradually increasing until at present the land is covered with an innumerable multitude, that stop the trains on the railroads, and threaten to destroy every vestige of vegetation. The military have been called out to exterminate the foe. On the 5th of April, 1,000 soldiers were sent to Badajoz, in Estramadura, to attack the invaders, which were in such force as to jeopardize the entire crops of the region. But this body of troops were considered insufficient, and a demand for 3,000 more was made. The tactics used by the soldiery will be executed principally with the shovel. A series of trenches are to be dug, into which the grasshoppers will be swept and buried. These measures are taken at an early stage in the life of the insect, before it has unfolded its wings and indulged in aerial flights. The grasshopper deposits its eggs in the earth in the month of August, and there they remain until the ensuing April. With cunning instinct, the animal chooses the most compact soil, and that which is likely to be undisturbed by the plow, as the receptacle for its eggs; and these await in safety the influence of the near spring sun to transform them to active life. As each female deposits about 100 eggs in the tubular cocoon which she carefully cements and buries, the annual increase of the pest is enormous.—Ex.
