

EASTERN NOTES.

A young New Yorker has obtained twenty-seven different card photographs of "future wives" who are in store for him, obtained from as many different sorceresses.

The Grand Jury of Polk county failed to find an indictment against Rankin for his misbehaviour with the public money, and so he is to escape entirely. Had he been a poor devil, and stolen a suit of clothes, he would have gone to the penitentiary, sure.—Wapello (Iowa) Republican.

There are twenty-nine canvas shows, so far as known, comprising circuses, menageries, museums, and all sorts of human and brute wonders, already organized and preparing to take the tented field of 1873.

A Des Moines shoe dealer drives down the nails which protrude from the sidewalks. That is a disinterested effort only equalled by that of a local editor stopping a runaway team. There are very few instances of the latter on record, however.

A German printer named Conrad Lutz, now living in Burlington, Iowa, has received official information that he has been drafted into the Wertemburg landwehr. Inasmuch as he left Germany when two years old, he intends remaining in the landwehr he is.

Iowa has five female superintendents of common schools: Mrs. E. J. Beers, of Grundy county; Miss Helen Wooster, of Kossuth county; Miss Sarah Culton, of Monona county; Mrs. Delila Stiles, of Osceola county; Miss Carrie Bassett, of Woodbury county.

The local editor on a Wilmington, North Carolina, paper went away, and his substitute almost went mad trying to hunt up news. He was happy at last, when this suggested itself to him: "Just 1,970 years to-day since Brutus gave his friend Julius Caesar a poke under the fifth rib."

A rather impatient old lady, residing in the neighborhood of the nitro-glycerine works in Maysville, had the misfortune to break a leg recently. She summoned a physician, a worthy member of the church, and begged that he would pray for her; but the heartless medicine man remarked: "Well, madam, I will set the limb, but you must do your own praying."

A man living in Prospect street, near Jay, Brooklyn, went home the other night in a bad temper. His supper wasn't ready. "What in thunder's the matter?" he asked, though "thunder" wasn't the word he used. "The fire isn't as hot as your temper, my dear," was the reply. He didn't ask any more conundrums that evening.

The co-operative plan has been adopted at Wilmington, Delaware, where several families who have carriages have clubbed together and built a co-operative stable, where all the horses and carriages are kept, with only two or three men, instead of a score, to do the work, thus enabling persons of moderate means to keep an equipage who otherwise could not afford it.

A fond father in Burlington, Iowa, growled like a dog with a sore head because a physician charged ten dollars for removing a kernel of corn from his son's ear, where it had lodged. He said a coffin only cost seven dollars, and the corn would have sprouted soon, and might have been pulled up by the roots.

Some poor congressmen, we are told, "whom the $5,000 back pay appropriation left as poor as ever," have sold their copies of the Medical and Surgical History of the Rebellion for $100 apiece. As each member was entitled to eight copies of the work, the vendors have made a good thing of it. It cost the government $125 a copy to print the book, but why find fault when it has probably been placed where it will do the most good.—New York Tribune.

Prof. Tracy of the Farmer's Club of St. Louis says: "That figuring one dog to every five people in the land there are 8,000,000 'dorgs.' The food for them would fatten as many hogs, each worth $12—or $96,000,000 in the aggregate. He don't desire to exterminate canines, but thinks the worthless curs fit only to snarl, breed fleas, and kill sheep, should be sent where the woodbine twineth. Why not send out a cargo to China? There they lack 'dorg chops' and 'soup.'"

A Western news man of the daily press thus amusingly describes the appearance of Alexander H. Stevens, at a reception given in honor of him: "Alexander H. Stevens emerged from the Kimball House, wrapped up in three overcoats and a loose blanket. The bundle, with a white head sticking out, was put in a carriage right end up, and propped in position. The bundle then coughed and said it was all right, and away the carriage rolled to the Capital, where it was taken out and unrolled and unrolled until Mr. Stevens was found."

The movement to restrict the railways in their tariff discriminations is becoming general. Six States have moved in that direction during the past month—Kansas, Missouri, Illinois, Ohio, New York, and New Jersey. The Eastern States are also rapidly waking up to an interest in the transportation question, about which the West is already so much agitated. The Boston Journal of Commerce points out that when the farmers cannot live by raising produce they will do their own manufacturing, and adds: "If our merchants desire to retain their Western trade, they must aid the West to obtain facilities to reach the seaboard."—Pittsburgh Commercial.
