A. W. STREET,

Postmaster.

Mr. Raymond of the New York Times, gives President Johnson credit for a vast amount of self-reliance. He says: "The truth is that Mr. Johnson never consults anybody, with any thought of being governed or guided by their advice. So entirely and thoroughly self-reliant a man probably never before sat in the Executive chair. This has been the great defect and fault of his career. He has no confidants, and we doubt whether a single member of his Cabinet has ever been able to influence him to change any action on which he had resolved, or even to know in advance what it would be."

DANGER OF IDLENESS.—It is no overstatement to say that, other things being equal, the man who has the greatest amount of intellectual resources is in the least danger from inferior temptations; if for no other reason, because he has fewer idle moments. The ruin of most men dates from some vacant hour. Occupation is the armor of the soul, and the train of idleness is borne up by all the vices. I remember a satirical poem, in which the devil is represented as fishing for men, and adapting his baits to the taste and temperament of his prey; but the idler, he said, pleased him most, because he bit the naked hook.—George S. Hillard's Mercantile Library Address.

If a colt's pistol has six barrels, how many ought a horse pistol to have?
