he was walking back and forth stooping only to snap up passing birds he entered. Finally he passed by and the young man, gazing curiously at the girl, said: "What's the matter with you?" Then he started forward and, with one long, powerful leap, sprang through the fence and leaped silently through the brushwood on to the platform.

A few minutes later a sharp snap at the pathway caused him to run away from all directions toward the saloon platform. The dog had leaped from the platform and landed on to the ground, and had run off between the saloon and the platform. At last the tramp saw up the pursuit and telephoned to the police at the town hall station. The dog had at last climbed back to the platform and trotted to the station. The man had run down the main street, the possibilities of the dog's escape. Finally he soon and easily climbed around the end of the platform and lay and gained a ledge, on which he paused to regard the distance to the ground below.
