PASSENG AWAY .- To-morrow in the last day of Anno Domini, 1871, and we bid it adject as a familiar friend, to be often remambered, but never more seen. It has brought many blessings and some crosses, pleasant gains and grievous losses. Altogether considered, we are very well satisfied with it, and we hope that the coming year will be no worse, to decent people, but much better and more favorable, if possible. The passing year has been an eventfut one certainly, in many respects, and the next will be eventful also, in fact we never saw a year that was not eventful. seither do we expect one.

To all of our subscribers, patrons, readers, and friends of all kinds we respectfully present our best wishes for their welfare and happiness at this festive season, and during the new year that will very shortly be in-

THEATRE. - Last night the first performance of "Ben McCullough, or as Certain as Death," with Mr. O. D. Byron in the title role, took place at the Theatre, and if hearty and frequent applause is anything to judge by, the audience were well pleased. The piece is highly sensational, and in many places very pathetic. The principal characters are "Ben McCullough," Mr. Byron; "Maud McCullough" wife of Mrs. Byron; and "Percy Burton," Mr. Thorne. In the delineation of Ben McCullough there is a good field for the dis-play of ability and Mr. Byron takes advanplay of ability and Mr. Byron man artist of tage, and shows himself to be an artist of very great ability. In "Across the Continent" his light is, as it were, hid under a bushel, not so in "Ben McCullough," it shipes forth resplendently. Mrs. Byron is an artist of well and well artists. an agreeable and graceful actress, and well sustained her dual part. Mr. Thorne looked and acted the villain of the piece in capital style; Mesers. Dunne, Graham and others also rendered very good support.

To give a synopais of the scenes and incidents of the play would occupy too much time said space, and so attempt would do it justice. It is very interesting; some of the tableaux. of the tableaux, as for instance, the improd Court scene in which "Ben" is of the "Supreme Court of the United lates," "the revolt among the inmates of the Nevada penitentiary, and others were received with the most vociferous manifesations of pleasure, and as the piece will be repeated to-night, we think most theatre-poers would do themselves a pleasure by going to the Theatre and seeing O. D. Byron in "Ben McCullough, or As Sartin

THE LECTURE AT MOSGAN COLLEGE. sight with attentive listeners to the acount given by the principal of the College of his experience on "The Battle Fields of his experience on "The Battle Fields of the Rebellion." The lecturer entered the service almost at the breaking out of the war, and remained until its close, serving during that period under Generals Grant, Sherman, Sheridan, Buell, Kilpatrick and Rosencranz. He participated in the various battles of the northern forces in their march from the Ohio to the Gulf, also in all the great engagements of Sherman's army from Chaitasoogs to Allanta, was at Chickensungs, with Wilson in the great davalry raid through Alabama, Mississippi and Georgia, resulting in the capture of Jaff Davis and the remnant of the Confederate army. He also served in Wil-Confederate army. He also served in Wilder's brugade of mounted infantry, and "he gallantry in planting the first flag on its enamy's entrenchments at Selma, Ala, was presented with a battle flag by the State of Illinois, said flag being now in the Descret Museum, having been presented to that institution by Mr.

With such an experience it can readily be believed that a man of such talent, ver satility, and fluency as Mr. Morgan, no difficulty in making a lecture of two hours' duration highly interesting and entertaining, and such it really was. Many of the lecturer's descriptions were life like and graphic in the extreme, and the sumerous sudience, by the closest attention, manifested the great interest and pleasure they felt in listening to Professor Horgan on "The Battledeids of the Rebel-was well enough satisfied that certain parties, noted for their opposition to "Mormonism," were desperately attached to "sensual intercourse," but nebody ruspected they were so thoroughly lost to all sense of decency as to rush into print and blason furth their own shame by unblushingly announcing the enjoyment of an evening devoted to that special business. "Generous entertainment," indeed! We should think so,
