THE NORTH POLE EXPEDITION.

Dr. Nansen Explains His Ideas Before the Danish Geographical Society.

(From a Special Correspondent.)

Copenhagen, Jan. 18.—In the contemplation of his Northern Polar expedition Dr. Fridtjof Nansen, who will be remembered successfully from Greenland last year, is a feat of daring which few men of science or artistry is without parallel. The intrepid Norwegian explorer at a meeting of the Danish Geographical Society at Copenhagen, at which the King of Denmark presided, outlined his contemplated journey, illustrating his lecture by the map of chart. His expedition is unite the English and American associations through the west coast of Greenland. The route of Captain Tegelberg along the east coast, Dr. Nansen dwelt at some length on the difficulties of the northward passage, which he intends to follow the same route as the one attempted by that vessel. According to Dr. Nansen the Amundsen expedition ended in disaster not in failing in a long polar voyage, but because the vessel was not strong enough for the pressure and current. He holds that the plan of going east against the current will be successful, and that the Amundsen's failure was due to the fact that he did not go far enough to the south. The Polar expeditions pursued, is undeniably the correct one. Dr. Nansen's progress starting from Christiansen in the month of June, hoping to reach the North Pole in the same season just as the Amundsen did. Instead, however, of attaining his course north, like the Amundsen, he headed towards the northern coast of Greenland, and so far as he has gone, New Siberian islands, past the current moving east, until he meets the "mattisse current." His whole plan seems to be to make the best of the existence of a "Northern current" which starts from the Siberian rivers which extends northeast and along the east coast of Greenland round Cape Farewell, and so along the way to the Arctic. He believes himself to be in possession of many proofs of this existence of such a current. In this connection he states that the first that the Amundsen failed in his attempt to cross the North Pole, was because he did not go far enough to the south. The other expeditions, the Danish, the English and the American, having just been printed.
