

DOLLIVER'S VIEW OF LEADING ISSUE

In Ogden Speech He Declares It To Be Development of Public Conscience.

COUNTRY NEEDS THE TARIFF

Without It He Urges Many Western Manufacturing and Industrial Enterprises Would Fail.

Declaring that the leading issue of this campaign is not connected with commerce or banking or business, but has directly to do with the continuing in power of that ideal of fearlessness, honesty, and uprightiness which has for seven years characterized Theodore Roosevelt's administration...

Senator Dolliver has served with Senator Smoot on the conservation of resources committee, appointed by President Roosevelt after the recent conference of governors. Of his work with Senator Smoot on this committee he said:

"I have never appreciated any honor I have ever received more than that by the favor of the president I have been associated with your own honored senator, Senator Smoot on a great committee which is organized to best find out how to reclaim the waste places of the nation and bring best to the front the great resources of the country."

"I remember the inception of the irrigation laws. Then Utah was the only state that understood what irrigation meant. I have seen two things memorable in my life. These are the reclamation of the arid lands of this country and the conservation of our natural resources by a well-defined forestry policy."

HALL PACKED. The speech of Senator Dolliver, like that of Senator Beveridge delivered Monday evening was listened to in a packed auditorium. To hear Dolliver, Salt Lake had, however, to journey to Ogden, and a special train was sent out at 6:45 p. m., carrying several hundred people.

Ogden's people turned out in great number so that when County Chairman O. B. Madison called the mass meeting to order, even standing room in the Opera house could not be had. On the stand, besides the guest of the evening, were Senator Smoot, Chief Justice McCarty, U. S. Attorney H. E. Booth, Col. Geo. B. Squires, and a number of other prominent citizens.

Senator Dolliver was introduced as a man who might have been running mate for Taft. He served as a good example of the unlimited opportunities of the young men of the United States. He has risen from a young man without wealth to a high position, and so can any young man rise.

Turning to national Republican policies, Senator Dolliver declared that he had observed the growing need that the centers of the state have been carried on by men imbued with a sense of duty to the people. "The largest thing before us is not the growth of our cities, the building of railroads, the opening of mines, or the extension of our industries. More important to us is the development of our national character. It is the public conscience that is our most sacred trust."

ISSUES OF CAMPAIGN. "I believe the paramount issue of this campaign is not our calls for commerce or questions of business interests, however important these may be, but is to preserve in our institutions those ideals of integrity, fearlessness and honesty that have made seven years of Theodore Roosevelt memorable in the history of our country."

"After this comes a question of a living for our people. It is the Republican party that seems to have the only understanding of what we have to deal with in our daily life. It was in 1897 after the Democratic administration that the Republican party rendered its great service to the nation and to the business community of America in the law bearing the honored name of good old Governor Dingley of Maine. I helped work on that law and I have never been able to get up much enthusiasm over the question of revising it."

"Certain it is that our Democratic friends are not equal to the task of taking it apart. They are too busy making speeches for this work. In the Denver platform they demand that five articles be placed on the free list, and of the five articles, three have been on the free list for 20 years. If the people of their bodies and their minds, if not by their friends, at least by acquaintances.

"When it is revised we want the people of this Rocky mountain country to have a fair chance. There are many prejudices against Utah. Some of them are well founded, and it is for the benefit of their countries far away and some of the bad advertising the state is getting.

But despite these prejudices the people out here deserve a chance to be heard. I have gone over the Rocky mountain country and I tell you that I honor the good old men who left their homes and some of their families far away and came out here and built up a country as good as the best. These deserve honor and their descendants the good will of every citizen and admitters the government of the United States.

INDUSTRIES NEGLECTED. "Democrats have shown a disposition to neglect every industry in which the Rocky mountain country is interested. I have heard Mr. Bryan denounce the tariff on wool, and I have seen him denounce his cot against the wool picture of the manufacturers of this country with free materials competing in the markets of the world with those of Bradford and Manchester and some of the trade of the old world. I lived through it. I saw industries all but killed, factories silent and workmen in rage. Some had clothes, but they had bought them during the Harrison administration.

"Mr. Bryan was going to kill the trusts by putting on the free list every article made by the trusts."

BEEF INDUSTRY. "I don't know that free trade is likely to kill the trusts anyway. It was at President McKinley's funeral that I heard the promise of the steel trust remark that the duty should be taken off steel.

"The American Sugar Refining company is a monopoly," Bryan says. "Kill it by putting sugar on the free list." What effect would this have on your beautiful valley? It couldn't be done without killing the beet sugar industry. I saw the first beet sugar factory built and I looked forward to the day when the industry would supply America.

"It was with pleasure and pride that I heard Mr. Taft say that neither by word nor deed would he disturb that industry by a string of lies. He found Roosevelt never too busy to tackle anything, and never too cocksure to make a mistake. He made mistakes, he urged in the matter of spelling, and in the matter of the coinage, but these were about all. "Taft," he declared, "has been thoroughly searched for the Bryan policies. He found Roosevelt had stolen from him, but neither 16 to 1, free-trade, anti-imperialism, militarism, or railroad ownership had been found. Taft, he declared, had been mentioned by Roosevelt as a coming president, before he himself had become president."

The speech at its conclusion and many points during its progress was much applauded.
