Comparative Merita of Suchess Manuring and Twenty in Manure.

Illias A. Long bearned a lesson in the application of manure when a boy in his father's nursery. He tells the story, as follows, in American (Lardening We purchased from a tamery a large piles of compast, hair, askes, lime and other referse, with enough tark in layers to make all pile up wall. In the whiter we shaw this on land devoted to nurser and ether crops, usually plowing it us der in the spring. Semetimes on phowed land we would incorporate nitrare with the soil, by the ne of 2 cuitivator or share harrow, in he spring.

plowed land we would incorporate minture with the soil, by the me of 2 cultivator or share harrow, in the appring.

One of the things that vividly person me are deal trees and placy from sail thus manured was the way in which routeds would lar hidd of congenital little of plant food. The trifts and celled knock of hair would be the attraction to a mass of small roots. This is illustrated in the secompanying shock, in which a a show benches of hair. This is illustrated in the secompanying shock, in which a a show benches of hair. This thing was seen not only in the case of seedling and tree routs but also in those of strawberry plants, which lie much nearer the surface.

A lessen to be drawn from this is that the plowing in of manure we a method of applying it should not yield to surface, applications in any marked degree. The artifly with which roots seek out and lay hold of particles of manure in the case stated slowed to me that these can be no mirtade in petting the plant food right when it will be medied. With the surface and application of manure is the off and winter there is often great less of feetility through example by leasting and surface from the plant for the procedule.
