

A HOLLAND COACH HORSE.

Druck Horse That Is Well For the All Purpose Animal.

The Holland horse is little known in America, yet there are magnificent specimens of the animal. Especially in Grand Rapids, the most noted coach horse in this country is the Dutch horse. The illustration is a famous prize winner from Holland.

Considered to be the best of all other parts of Holland, and for this reason the horse has exceptionally good

Foot and wheel.

The Holland horse is brought up as a general purpose animal, but makes a fine show horse. Especially at the state fairs to be seen in continental capitals is the Dutch horse in his glory. For our fashionable coachmen it would be a simple matter to have the Dutch horse in his glory. He is usually from 16 to 18 in height, with strong neck, small, high head and a somewhat hollow back. The generally rounded shape of the group is notable. We ought to have the Dutch horse in his glory. He is not a great animal, but he is a great animal.

The Dutch horse is a great animal.

I am disappointed in one thing connected with water sking. My plan has been to dry off the horse in July and turn him off to pasture, but it is getting more and more difficult every year to dry him off soon enough to do this. This year I could not get him dried off till within three weeks of the time when he is to be turned out. I had to turn him off to pasture, but it is getting more and more difficult every year to dry him off soon enough to do this. This year I could not get him dried off till within three weeks of the time when he is to be turned out. I had to turn him off to pasture, but it is getting more and more difficult every year to dry him off soon enough to do this.

On the other hand, the summer comes in in March or April, and in November without any trouble. You have only to turn him out to pasture, and he will do well. With a good north wind blowing and the thermometer at 20 or below, and who will dry up fast enough. But will he then be able to dry up the winter's work? Look as well. What effect this period of milking will have on the calves I can not tell, but do not expect any more. I have seen no ill effects yet, and when I do it will be time enough to think about this part of the matter.

Fattening lambs.

In the Mississippi valley, oats, corn and wheat, bran, either alone or mixed, are the foods most used for fattening sheep. An experiment in fattening 125 Hampshire-Merino lambs at the Michigan station in 1905 by F. B. Moore, fed showed that the lambs receiving American corn in the grain ration, either in whole or in part, gave the best results. In general, more feed was given to the lambs receiving grain or oats. A grain ration of bran proved to be an inferior material for fattening lambs. A ration of corn and oats produced slightly better results than either a mixture of corn and bran or of oats and bran, all in equal parts by weight. The results indicate that in fattening lambs by means of a soft feed, in which the lambs have free access to grain at all times, the results are improved by a large consumption of grain to yield one pound of gain, than when fed measured quantities at regular intervals, and other things being equal, the former plan is more profitable. A mixture of whole corn, bran and hay, and of about two-thirds by weight of a good quality of whole grain, proved a cheap and successful ration for fattening lambs. The rate of gain was apparently increased by allowing during the fattening period. In this experiment colder temperatures were quite generally accompanied by increased gain. The amount of available protein in the various rations was apparently a less potent factor in producing gain than the amount of available carbohydrates.
