EVENING NEWS.

Saturday, . . June 30, 1888.

TRAMP OR GENTLEMAN?

Undoubtedly he was a tramp.

The solitary marshal, whose business it was to represent the majesty of the law in the little village of Blue Rock, spotted the stranger as soon as he entered the place.

The visitor was shabbily dressed. His coat was ragged and his trousers were patched. His hat was without a brim and his shoes let his feet touch the ground.

"I'll shadow him," said the marshal to himself.

The tramp slouched along down the shady side of the street until he reached the depot. Here he paused and took a seat on the platform.

"Hello, there!" said the marshal as he came up. "You must move on."

The man thus rudely spoken to turned a weary face toward the officer.

It was not a very clean face, and it bore traces of care. But it was not a bad face nor a very old face. On the contrary, it was rather frank and youthful.

All this the marshal took in, but he had his orders and he had to carry them out. Blue Rock had passed an ordinance sut jecting all tramps to thirty days' imprisonment at hard labor.

"What are you doing here?" asked the officer roughly.

"I am looking for work," was the reply.

"Who are you, and where are you from?"

"I am a gentleman," said the tramp, wearily.

"'A gentleman!'" shouted the marshal. "You look like one. What is your name and where are you from?"

The wayfarer put his hand to his head and a puzzled look came over his face.

"I would give anything to be able to answer your questions," he said, "but I can't answer, for I do not know."

At this astounding reply the marshal raised his baton.

"None of your chaff," he growled. "Now, I'll give you one chance. You must march out of town or I'll run you in."

The stranger evidently understood the full meaning of the threat. He leaped from his seat with a frightened look, and without a word walked off down the railroad track.

"He's been arrested before," said the officer, thoughtfully. "No doubt he has been in a dozen jails. Well, so he leaves here it is all right."

Two hours later the guardian of the peace found his tramp occupying his former seat on the platform.

"Now, you must come with me," said the marshal, angrily.

He seized the lounger by one arm and jerked him up.

The prisoner made no resistance. He looked reproachfully at his captor, and started on with him without a word.

At Blue Rock justice was always swift, although perhaps it was a little crude.

In less than an hour the tramp was convicted and locked up in the stockade, where he was set to work breaking rock.

The prisoner's obstinacy in asserting that he had forgotten his name and former place of abode made the petty village officials very mad, and the poor fellow was put to work at harder tasks than usual.

As the weeks rolled on it was noticed that the prisoner displayed no resentment or impatience. He went about his work cheerfully and without a complaint.

When the prisoner's time was out the first man he met after his release was the marshal.

"Get out of the town right away," was the officer's advice.

"But I want to stay here," said the tramp "I want work, and I like the place."

"You are a blank fool to want to stay in this town," replied the other, and it will be my duty to arrest you again if you don't leave. So march!"

The unfortunate wretch made no further appeal. He limped off slowly and was soon out of sight.

Later in the day the marshal passed by the depot and saw a spectacle that made him open his eyes.

The tramp was on the platform, and the superintendent was talking to him.

"Come here," said the superintendent to the marshal, "and take this vagabond off!"

There was nothing to do but to make the arrest. A speedy conviction followed, and the luckless victim was again sent to the stockade for thirty days.

At last the month came to an end and the prisoner was turned out. This time the marshal marched him beyond the town limits and left him.

"He has got too much sense to come back," reported the marshal to the mayor.

"We may have been too hard on him," responded the mayor. "I sometimes think he in wrong in the head."

"Well, it is too late to talk about it," said the other, and the conversation ended.

The tramp did not turn up again that day or the next.

The worthy marshal began to be worried and the mayor was a little uneasy. Blue Rock was such a small place that a sensation was always welcome, and the unknown prisoner had be the talk of the town for sixty days.

"He's hiding in the woods, and will slip in here some night and burn the town," said one.

This idea found great favor, and that night the villagers found it difficult to sleep.

On the following day there was a railway excursion to a point of interest forty miles away, and everybody of any consequence in the town went along. The mayor and council, the superintendent of the depot and even the marshal joined the party.

The return trip was made after dark, and the train sped along at a fearful rate of speed. The excursionists were all in a jolly humor and were at the height of their festivities when the frightful shrieking of the locomotive whistle startled everybody. The train came to a full stop, and among those who rushed out were the mayor and marshal of Blue Rock.

At the head of the train they found the engineer and conductor talking with a man who held one hand to his side, from which the blood was streaming.

"Great God! It is our tramp!" exclaimed the marshal.

"You are right," said the mayor. "My poor fellow, what is the matter?"

The tramp fell in a fainting fit before he could answer the question.

"You see," said the engineer, "this man was tramping through the woods when he came to the track and found two train wreckers tampering with the rails. Well, the tramp, or whatever he is, jumped on the two scoundrels like a tiger. He disabled one of them, but the other stabbed him in the side and ran away. So he built a fire on the track, and as soon as I saw it I stopped the train."

Just then several passengers came up with the wounded wrecker, who had been seriously injured by the tramp.

The villain evidently thought that he was mortally wounded, for he made a full confession.

"I think," said the Blue Rock mayor, "that we owe a debt of gratitude to our preserver. Many men in his fix would not have turned a hand to save us."

The tramp opened his eyes and smiled faintly.

"Did you know we were on the train?" asked the marshal.

"Oh, yes; I saw you when you went up the road this morning, and I hung about here because I saw those two chaps acting suspiciously on the track."

"Come, now, who are you and where is your home?" asked the marshal.

"I am a gentleman. I have forgotten my name and all about things that happened years ago. I can tell you nothing more."

"By George!" said the mayor, "I believe he tells the truth."

"We must take him to Blue Rock and care for him," said one of the party. "He shall have the freedom of the town and the best there is in it."

"Thank you," said the tramp, with a smile. "I am satisfied now."

A spasm of pain contracted his features.

A gasp, a fluttering of the breath and the unknown was dead!

Tramp or gentleman? Who was he and what lay back of his misfortunes?

These were the questions the Blue Rock excursionists asked each other on their way home.—Atlanta Constitution.

Minister (to sick official, who, by the way is of the republican persuasion)—"You are aware, my dear brother, that you are about to die?" Sick official—"Yes, I am aware of it." Minister—"And do you feel you can go with resignation?" Sick official—"Yes, but I'm going without resignation. We die, you know, but never resign." The ruling passion is strong in death.

A Chicago Photographer's Proposition.

A Chicago photographer is about to perpetrate a joke on his contemporaries which is worthy of the severest reprehension. He is nearing the completion of a collection of some ten thousand persons who are deemed celebrated by the more or less unanimous testimony of the American public in this day and generation, and is to commit it to a memorial safe which he has arranged to deposit in the city hall vaults and have opened in 1976, the second centennial of the United States. He proposes to emphasize this atrocity by putting in with the pictures brief biographical sketches of their subjects.

To appreciate the hilarity which this is calculated to excite among our posterity, let us suppose that it had been possible to deposit in a place of safety a thousand or two portraits of the men deemed celebrated in 1776. We should, probably, have had more of the familiar names of history, but in what extraordinary company! And in these days of newspaper notoriety, think of an assemblage of 10,000 "celebrated personages" whose fame is expected to survive some ninety years! If it be good to give posterity a laugh at our expense, the plan has something to commend it, but who would not pray to be delivered from preservation in this photographic cenotaph? — The Epoch.

Between Two Dangers.

"Do ye reckon that Garfield will cut any figure in the republican convention this year?" asked Mr. Thistlepod, anxiously. "I don't seem to see much mention of him in the papers."

"Garfield? Why, man alive, Garfield's been dead these five or six years!"

"That so?" queried the old man, with a cunning, incredulous look; "he really did die then?"

"Why, of course, man; you must be asleep. Country didn't talk of anything else for more than a year."

"Well," said the old man, "I remember seeing all the papers in black borders and big headlines about it, but I didn't know. I never read past the headlines when they sound very startlin', for sure's I do I get caught in some patent medicine or insurance or soap advertisement. I'm a little too cautious mebbe, but every time I break through this rule I get caught. So Garfield really is dead? Well, well, well; and here I've been a-plumbin' myself all this time on bein' the only man in America too smart to git caught by the advertisin' man. Well, well, well."

And he looked so humbled as he went out that no man had the heart to cast a stone after him.—Burdette in Brooklyn Eagle.

Saved.

The other day a man walking slowly up Miami avenue encountered a man walking hurriedly down. They ran into each other, both drew off and apologized, and the one in a hurry added:

"I've been so mad all the morning I couldn't see straight."

"Nothing serious, I hope."

"Well, my wife had some photos taken and the artist made a botch job. I'm now on my way to punch his head."

"Can I see them?"

They were exhibited, and after a careful inspection the gentleman said: "My friend, you are way off. The work is well done, and you ought to be proud of your wife's looks."

"Do you mean it?"

"Certainly. There are not ten as handsome women in Detroit."

"Shoo!"

"It's a fact, and the work is that of a real artist. You should be more than satisfied."

"Well, I declare! I guess I've been too hasty, and I'll drop the matter right here. Glad I didn't punch the photographer's head.

"Yes, so am I," said the other to himself as he went his way.

It was the artist himself.—Detroit Free Press.

THE PEOPLE OF BARBADOS.—I think the density of population is what impresses a stranger most. It is like living aboard a man-of-war, where men are as thick as bees, and space for another one seems difficult to find. There is absolutely no privacy. Out from the town of Bridgeport, as far as you choose to go, the roads are like streets with little boxes of houses along the wayside, each holding a numerous family, while troops of negroes stroll along the white way. Sit for a moment beneath a lignumvitæ or broad-spun shade tree and negroes spring up from the ground to gaze and wonder who you are. This teeming concentrated human life is the first novelty that a tourist sees.

In an era of one hundred and sixty-six miles, one hundred and eighty thousand human beings live, and apparently live comfortably well. It is, perhaps, the most densely crowded territory known, and this state of affairs makes itself evident at once in every part of the island.

Streets are crowded from building to building all day long, as a New York pavement is in the forenoon. The people are almost entirely good-humored, docile, clean, and neatly dressed in white.

SHE SIZED HIM UP.—The local newspaper of Seymour, Conn. says that a citizen of that place recently drove out to Zoar bridge to see the ice heaps still remaining. At the toll gate was a young woman "with strong attractions for a white horse," as the editor puts it, and the citizen thought he might safely quiz her a bit. She answered all his questions demurely and with no apparent thought of malice; but when, having had his little joke, he asked her what it cost to go over the bridge, the answer came back: "If you could read that sign you'd see for yourself. Hog, one cent; jackass, two. Give us two cents!"—New York Sun.

Politeness is an easy virtue, costs little and has great purchasing power. —Dr Alcott.

LEGAL NOTICE.

In the Probate Court in and for Salt Lake County, Territory of Utah.

In the Matter of the Estate of John Riches, deceased.

Order appointing time and place for Settlement of Final Account and to Hear Petition for Distribution.

ON READING AND FILING THE PEtition of Isaac Riches and John Riches, administrators of the estate of John Riches, deceased, setting forth that they have filed their final account of their administration upon said estate in this court, that all the debts have been fully paid and that a portion of said estate remains to be divided among the heirs of said deceased, and praying, among other things, for an order allowing said final account and of distribution of the residue of said estate among the persons entitled.

It is ordered that all persons interested in the estate of the said John Riches, deceased, be and appear before the Probate Court of Salt Lake County, at the Court Room of said Court, in the County Court House at Salt Lake City on the 19th day of July, 1888, at 11 o'clock a. m., then and there to show cause, why an order allowing said final account, and of distribution, should not be made, of the residue of the estate among the heirs and devisees of the said John Riches, deceased, according to law.

It is further ordered that the Clerk of this Court cause copies of this order to be posted in three public places in Salt Lake County, and published in the DESERET EVENING NEWS, a newspaper printed and circulated in Salt Lake County, three weeks successively prior to said 19th day of July, 1888.

ELIAS A. SMITH,
Probate Judge.

Dated June 6th, 1888.
