THE NEW PENITENTIARY. It Will Soon be Occupied by the Prisoners. By courtesy of United States Marshal Dyer, a representative of the News visited the penitentiary this morning, and was shown through the buildings by Warden Pratt. The new structure is about completed, there being but a few finishing touches to be made in the painting, and it is expected that the prisoners will be transferred to their new quarters next week. The prison building is an excellent structure for the purpose, and considering the smallness of the appropriation made for its erection by the government, it is remarkable that so much has been done. An examina tion of the building will show that the means has been VERY CAREFULLY EXPENDED.

In this the door is of solid iron, with a small opening for air, and when closed, the room is rendered dark as night. This "double blackness" will doubtless have the effect of bringing the worst "tough" to time in a few hours.

The premises have a sewerage system, the outlet of which is 110 feet outside of the walls of the enclosure. This, with the fi st-class ventilation afforded, is expected to keep the atmos-phere perfectly healthy.

The system of waterworks is a very good one and ample for all pur-poses. Two tanks, with a capacity of two thousand gallons each, are built over the cells, in the highest part of the structure. These are supplied by pumping from a well in the yard.

A Mether-in-law's Hatred. Scarcely able to walk, and covered from head to foot with bruises, a A GOOD NURSE GIRL, WELL REyoung German woman named Grosh made her way to the city hall this morning in company with several neighbors, and told a sad story of hunger, privation and want, and cruel treatment at the hands of her husband and his mother.

the girl married Nicholas Grosh, a house mover, who was living with his mother, brother and sister at the corner of Fourteenth and Centre streets The heuse was a two-story building, and Grosh and his young wife began housekeeping in the lewer part, while the rest of the family occupied the second story. The marriage was against the wishes of the mother, and immediately after the arrival of her new daughter the old woman began a systematic course of persecution and never let an opportunity pass to make the young wife's life miserable F nilly she persuaded her son to leave his wife and come up stairs to live, leaving her alone in the lower part of the house. This change occurred two weeks ago, since which time, according to the young woman's statement, The house was a two-story building, weeks ago, since which time, according to the young woman's statement, she has been subject to all manner of abuses. The goods with which the young couple went to housekeeping were purchased on the instalment plan and at the time of the separation there yet remained due on the goods $11, which, it is claimed, Nicholas was fully able to pay, but instead of doing which, it is claimed. Nicholas was fully able to pay, but instead of doing so told the storekeeper that he did not want the goods and that he could remove them. The goods were taken away last week, the only article of furniture left being a cooking stove. The young woman owned a few of the bed clothes, and with these she made a bed on the fluor, where she she made a bed on the floor, where she has slept during the recent cold nights without a light or fire. At times there was nothing to eat in the house, and ashamed to let her friends or neighbors know of her pitiful condition, she would retire to her lonely cot supperless. In this condition the deserted woman was lying last Wednesday night, when she heard footsteps coming down the stairway on the outside and in a few moments more nearly every pane of glass in the windows in that part of the house was broken, allowing the cold, drizzling fain to fall upon the bed, where, almost crazed by grief and fright, the helpless woman

All these things she bore uncom-plainingly until this morning, when she says her mother-in-law beat her unmercifully and threatened to kill her if she did not leave. Another son wit-nessed the affair, but did not interfere. Her cries, however, brought her hus-band, who was told by the mother that if he ever lived with the woman again she would kill him also. It is not im-probable that the young woman would have received still further punishment
