SOMEWHERE.

'Tis always morning somewhere, little heart;
Somewhere the sky is ever fair and blue.
No night can wrap in darkness all the world,
Some rift the sun is ever shining through.

There's always happiness somewhere, sad heart;
Somewhere is always love and hope and cheer.
No sorrow can forever hide God's smile,
No life is toil and grief from birth to tier.

Look up and bid with patience then, dear heart;
The sacred promise of the dawn is true.
Beyond the cloud a glad new day shall rise,
And what of joy is yours will come to you.

THE LATTER-DAY SAINTS' COLLEGE

At the Latter-day Saints College, beginning at 11 a. m. Thursday, May 19th, the commencement exercises of the sixth academic year of the Latter-day Saints College were held.

There were present on the stand Presidents George Q. Cannon and Joseph F. Smith, Captain Willard Young; of the Stake Presidency President Angus M. Cannon and Joseph E. Taylor; Bishop Elias Morris and George H. Taylor, H. W. Naisbitt, and W. B. Dougall.

The proceedings opened with the anthem: "Jerusalem, my Glorious Home," by the students, conducted by Instructor Richard Haag.

Prayer was offered by Instructor W. H. Chamberlain.

The College Male Glee Club rendered with fine effect, "Two Roses."

Brother Stephen Worthington delivered an address, "The Intermediate Department." He said the time had arrived when we must give each other the parting hand. From the associations of the past year there is no wonder we should have feelings of pain. If we have done our work well at school we shall find ourselves better prepared for the duties of life or to pursue higher branches of knowledge.

An address, "Our Lady Students," was made by Miss Donette Smith. The ladies were satisfied with the work of this institution. They thanked the teachers for their earnest labors in their behalf. They hoped they had not labored in vain. She eulogized the characters and labors of Dr. Jas. E. Talmage, our former principal, Prof. Willard Done, his worthy successor, and our lady superintendent, "Aunt" Camilla Cobb. She dilated upon the objects of education and expressed the thanks of the ladies to those who had labored so earnestly for their welfare and their prayers ascended for the future labors and for the success of our institutions.

A piano selection, "La Castagnette," was beautifully rendered by Miss Cicilia Sharp.

Miss Zina Bennion made the address on "Theology in School." The place given to theology is the chief characteristic of our school. Here we may learn to love the works of God on earth and on high; but above all this is the study of the Gods themselves. The brightest part of the day in our school is given for its pursuit and this plan gives a heavenly influence over the work of the day. It is the foundation of all sciences; it is the building material and the capstone of all thought work. We study the enrobed God in the stars, in the crust of our mighty earth, in all life, from the gigantic elephant to the amoeba.

Its study leads us not only to appreciate the fields of literature and science but opens the future to our view and renders our society on earth more pure and more pleasurable.

Brother Edwin Dibble delivered the address on "Our Academic Graduates." The student of today is the practical man of tomorrow. All should lend more time to the study of subjects of a professional nature. The man of science is envied in the pleasure he takes in delving into the works of nature; the student of literature, the unbounded interest he takes with his classmate. Yet we must accord to the man of business the highest place of all. The model business man is one who has the interest of mankind at heart. His work is nobler than it is generally conceived to be. It is for him to improve the face of the earth, to support mankind and to ameliorate his condition.

A piano selection, "Grand Gallop de Concert," was rendered with fine effect by Miss Katie Romney.

An essay reviewing "Evangeline, the Pride of Acadia," was read by Miss Nellie Wallace.

A tenor solo was then rendered by Brother George D. Pyper. In response to an encore he rendered the "Linden Tree."

Brother Philip S. Maycock then made the valedictory address. In considering what had been said of education today he was reminded of the words of Martin Luther: "The progress of a city depends not upon its earthly riches but upon the education of its inhabitants." Spoke of the necessity of thorough work in the intermediate department as it is the foundation of the superstructure. When we enter it our views are narrow, ere long we have to meet many roads. One leads to the Elysian fields of literature, one to the stern labors of business life; another road leads to the heights of the mathematics, a fourth to the sublime heights of science. The road chosen by those whom he represented was one which lead them to the duties of a teacher. He contrasted the teacher of the present with the one held in the popular mind in the past. In conclusion, he eulogized the work of the teacher, and eloquently delivered the adieu of his address.

Then followed the presentation of certificates to the graduates by the principal.

"The Student's Morning Ramble" was rendered by the students.

Dr. James E. Talmage then delivered an address. Many duties had caused his absence from the college much of the time of the past term of school, but his thoughts had ever been with us. These exercises had led him to think of the beauty of the title that has been given them, Commence
