THEATRE.—Another large audience assembled at the theatre on Saturday evening, to see Neck and Neck.

We cannot approve of the execution scene, some of the most painful features of which might have been left to the imagination without detracting from the merits of the play. In England, from a sense of the demoralizing effects of public executions, the execution scene of a drama of late years has been carried into effect within the goal grounds, witnessed by a few persons only, and it does appear in very real and true excitement to the audience to be presented, on the boards of a theatre, before a miscellaneous assembly, male and female, in various conditions of succubity and debauchery, and peculiarly liable to induce unpleasant consequences. To us these scenes are revolting and disgusting. We consider them degrading to the drama, and demoralizing to the audience.

The play otherwise is of a very attractive nature. There is a well sustained interest all through. Incidents are abundant, with the spice of wide variety in its character. There is much to be done, and most of it is very well done. The objectionable scenes referred to excepted, the play is of a higher class than many others of the ultra sensational type.

Mr. Stetson, as Walter Wilmarth, is a vigorous, spry, energetic, excellent actor, and the company naturally play up to him with corresponding vim. Miss Connelley as Carrie plays the part of a girl with spirit, and appropriateness, and with drawn to excellent advantage. Miss Adams was effective as Peg, and Mrs. Clawson funny and faithful as Jenny. Mrs. Bowring always dresses well, and if she does not always wear in acting it is not through not trying to do so—she takes pains to give satisfaction. Messrs. Thomas as Carroll Denman, and Dudley as Jim Johnson played in their usual careful style and deserve commendation. Mr. Harris as Curtis Pumpkin, and Mr. Graham as his big son, Simon Pumpkin, were particularly at home—their whimsical comicities repeatedly bringing down the house.

The play will be repeated to-night, for the benefit of Mr. E. T. Stetson.
