CONTESTED ELECTION,

TERRITORY OF UTAH.

Geo. R. Maxwell vs. Geo. Q. Cannon.

Argument of Halbert E. Paine, Counsel for Sitting Member.

(Before the Committee on Elections of the House of Representatives of the United States, Washington, D. C., 1874.)

Ten days later, on the 23d day of June, 1862, the consideration of the bill was resumed in the Senate, and it was, after a short debate, so amended as not to apply to the Vice-President, or to Senators or Representatives in Congress, or to any other officers for whom an oath of office is prescribed in the Constitution of the United States. And the bill thus amended was passed by the Senate on the same day. But the Conference Committee on this bill struck out the amendment, and their report was finally adopted without debate in the Senate. The grounds upon which this law was vindicated, although not stated with much care or precision, are nevertheless clearly enough disclosed by the debates. It was enacted as a war measure. The ironclad oath was adopted as the countersign which should, in time of war, exclude domestic enemies from the civil administration of the Government, in the same manner and for the same reason that the military countersign was employed to exclude those enimies from the military lines of the army. It was enacted as a measure of defence against an armed enemy in time of war, and was as necessary and as justifiable as any other war measure not specifically marked out in the text of the Constitution.

The case cited by Mr. Trumbull was that of Barker v. The People, 3 Cowan, 686. An examination of this case will show that, while it was not an authority even in favor of the constitutionality of the oath of office act, it was very far indeed from being an authority in favor of the contestant in the case now before this committee. Barker was indicted and tried in the city of New York, in 1822, for sending a challenge to fight a duel, under the statute of November 5, 1816, which provided that any person who should engage in dueling should be beemed guilty of a public offense, and being convicted thereof, should be incapable of holding or being elected to any post of profit, trust, or emolument, civil or military, under that State. The jury found Barker guilty, and the judgment of the court was that, "for the offense aforesaid, as charged in the first, second, third, and fourth counts of the said indictment wherof he is convicted, he be incapable of holding or being elected to any post of profit, trust, or emolument, civil or military, under the State of New York."

The State constitution, in force at the time of the passage of the act of November 5, 1816, was that which was adopted on the 20th of April, 1777. The only provisions which it contained touching the subject of qualifications for office were these: that chancellors and judges of the supreme court should, during their terms of office, hold no other office except that of member of Congress; that the first judges of the county courts should in like manner hold no other office, except that of State senator or member of Congress; that sheriffs and coroners should not hold their offices for more than four years in succession; that sheriffs should, during their official terms, hold no other office; that ministers of the Gospel and priests should be ineligible to office; that the town clerks, supervisors, assessors, constables, and collectors, and all other officers then eligible by the people, should always continue to be so eligible, in the manner directed by the existing or future acts of legislature; that no member of the State should be disfranchised or deprived of any of the rights or privileges secured to the subjects of the State by that constitution, unless by the law of the land or the judgment of his peers.

The chancellor pronounced the udgment of the court of errors.

He cited the 1st section of the act of the 5th of November, 1816, to suppress dueling, which prescribed that "the persons convicted shall be incapable of holding or being elected to any post of profit, trust, or emolument, civil or military, under this State;" and he said that the objection then made was that this punishment was inconsistent with the constitution.

Eligibility to office, he said, was not declared as a right or principle by any express terms of the Constitution; but it resulted as a just deduction from the express powers and provisions of the system. The basis of the principle was the absolute liberty of the electors and the appointing authorities to choose and to appoint any person who was not made ineligible by the Constitution. Ineligibility to office, therefore, belonged not exclusively or specially to electors enjoying the right of suffrage. It belonged equally to all persons whomsoever not excluded by the Constitution. He therefore conceived it to be entirely clear that the legislature could not establish arbitrary exclusions from office, or any general regulation requiring qualifications, which the Constitution had not required. If, for example, it should be enacted by law that all physicians, or all persons of a particular religious sect, should be ineligible to public trusts, or that all persons not possessing a certain amount of property should be excluded, or that a member of the assembly must be a freeholder, any such regulation would be an infringement of the Constitution; and it would be so because, should it prevail, it would be, in effect, an alteration of the Constitution itself. But the question before the court was not at all of this character. The legislature had made no such general regulation. They had prescribed that incapacity to hold public trust should be the punishment of a particular crime; and the question was, whether they had power to prescribe such incapacity or not. The power of the legislature in the punishment of crimes he held not to be a special grant or a limited authority to do any particular thing or to act in any particular manner. It was a part of "the legislative power of this State," mentioned in the first section of the Constitution. It was the sovereign power of the State to maintain social order by laws for the due punishment of crimes. It was a power to take life and liberty, and all the rights of both, when the sacrifice was necessary to the peace, order, and safety of the community. This general authority was vested in the legislature; and as it was one of the most ample of their powers, its due exercise was among the highest of their duties. When an offender was imprisoned, he was deprived of most of the rights of a citizen; and when he suffered death, all his rights were extinguished. The legislature had power to prescribe imprisonment or death as the punishment of any offence. The rights of a citizen were thus subject to the power of the State in the punishment of crimes; and the restrictions of the Constitution upon this, as upon all the general powers of the government, were that no citizen should be deprived of his rights, unless by the law of the land or the judgment of his peers; and that no person should be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law.

DIRECTORY

Salt Lake City and Utah Territory.

A WORK OF THE CHARACTER INDICATED BY THE ABOVE TITLE IS UR-gently demanded by public necessity. A twelvemonth ago, when the undersigned announced their intention of issuing such a work, another Directory was presented to the public, and they immediately withdrew their advertisement. There being no proposition to publish a Directory from any other quarter at present, and the importance of Salt Lake with the growing industries of the Territory calling for one, they propose issuing, on or before the 1st of April, a

DIRECTORY of SALT LAKE CITY and UTAH TERRITORY,

Compiled and arranged by

EDWARD L. SLOAN,

Whose former DIRECTORY of Salt Lake gave so much satisfaction.

The DIRECTORY OF SALT LAKE CITY AND UTAH TERRITORY FOR 1874, will contain

A General Directory of Salt Lake City; a Business Directory of Salt Lake City;

A Business Directory of Ogden, Provo, Corinne, Alta, Bingham and Ophir; with

An Official Directory of every County and Municipality in Utah.

It will also contain a Chronological History of the Territory; a description of the various Mining Districts, with much interesting and reliable information relative to the leading mines and their development; and to the Agricultural, Manufacturing and Industrial resources of the Territory.

☞ Canvassers soliciting Subscriptions and Advertisements will call upon business men and others in a few days.
