

FROM VARSITY TO GUTTER

THE record—could one be kept—of the afterlives of the 2,000 "varsity men who leave Oxford and Cambridge every year would be a document containing as much romance as a score of novels. Many of these men reach the highest positions life has to offer, many sink to the lowest depths.

At present there is an Oxford M.A. acting as conductor of a suburban bus. No one but himself knows his real name, or his story. Passengers occasionally notice in his accent the tones of a cultured man, but to the eye he is, in dress and appearance, an ordinary bus conductor.

RELENTLESS FATE

A few years ago, in a street near the docks, there stood daily a shabby man selling whelks. That man had been one of the highest wranglers of his year at Cambridge. He got into trouble soon after leaving the "varsity," and was disowned by his family. For a time he acted as an assistant master in a grammar school. His disgrace followed him, and drove him from that employment. He could obtain no other, and before long the pressure of starvation had brought him down to the level of the outcast.

The traveler, in his own undergraduate days, saw, one cold winter night, a miserable figure shivering outside the leading university hotel. Just then brilliantly lighted, and full of noisy parties of undergraduates. The man was in the last stages of a fatal disease. He entered the hotel, and asked to see a member of one of the parties dining within. It was then that he told his wretched story, afterwards, in many particulars, confirmed. Twenty years before, he himself had been one of the most rolicking and carefree undergraduates who used to make merry in that very hotel. On leaving the university he had lost his money and gone abroad, but had returned home to die.

The traveler who alights from a train at a certain lonely station on the West Australian goldfields will find a ramshackle cart waiting to convey him to the local "hotel." Its driver, with his ragged beard and sun-baked face, looks like a rather bad specimen of the "sun-downer." Fifteen years ago, however, he was a Cambridge "blood," who ran his racing stud in Newmarket and steeplechased at Coton. Racing ruined him; his friends cash him off. He put together enough money to emigrate to the goldfields, had bad luck there, and now drives the hotel bus.

SUBMERGED ROMANCE

Sometimes the lost "varsity man" has become so cut off from society rather than cultivation. In a lonely part of the Rockies, wandering hunters sometimes see two desperate-looking figures in sun-tanned buckskin shirts of unskilled manufacture. They look like horse-thieves. Really they are cultured English gentlemen, with an extensive knowledge of ancient Greek, who are merely living the life which happens to appeal to them more than any other.

CHICAGO WANTS TO ADD TO REVENUE WITH RENTS

City revenue from rent for the street spaces under sidewalk used in Chicago for a hundred purposes, by downtown cafes, department stores, hotels and wholesale houses, boot black stands and barber shops will annually add to the city treasury funds $250,000. An immediate collection of $150,000 back rent due the city was authorized by an appellate court decision, and set down by Judge Julian Mack. If this judgment is upheld, a popular controversy between the city and tenants of downtown buildings, that has been waged for years, is upheld by the supreme court, outlying districts will also be affected. The space underground that the small fruit dealer, the news vendor or the pedler above ground is compelled to pay for, both by license and royalty, will no longer below ground become gratis to the grabber of the most moneyed competitors. Several of the most exclusive cafes are in the basements of skyscrapers in a district where every foot of space is as valuable as fresh air, being worth hundreds of dollars per square foot, and others have burrowed and extended their floor space from 14 to 16 feet under the street to the very edge of the sidewalk, and as far out as has been deemed safe without conflicting with the sewer and gas mains of the city. On alleys fronting the same is done, and this space is commonly used for barber shops, bathhouses, and in the case of the mercantile houses as store or sales rooms. On State street, where the sidewalk is 25 feet wide, every large shop in the "loop" district boasting a basement sales room has run both basements and sub-basements out the width of the walk. Yet, in the case of the sidewalk space for sub-sidewalk space amounted to only $250 ac against $2497.50 received from the same sources for bay windows and store fronts, and the merchandise stands of fruit, and newspaper vendors and the like. The total area of the loop district where the commercial and financial business of the city centers, is but three and one-half square miles with some 16 square miles of alleys, and at least eight square miles of the unperfected space has been appropriated for the commercial benefit of the occupants of adjoining buildings. —Chicago News Letter.

EXODUS FROM ILLINOIS TO AVOID STOCK TAXES.

The exodus of big corporations with Illinois charters to Maine has become a pageant, a procession of wealth and industry alarming to the state authorities. No less than 60 concerns have left the corporate franchises conferred by Illinois which the state's capital stock has never made burdensome and has required that the same old stamp as a foreign corporation doing business in the state and there gain the legal right to hold the stock in other corporations. As for the working of the general corporation tax law advocated by President Taft it is still too new to have been construed in the courts. Companies have been advised to meet its demands for payments and statements. Attorneys of standing have declared the statute unconstitutional, in a few cases business has been taken over by partnerships. John W. Gates, among other wealthy men, has sold his Chicago home and removed actually and nominally to New York. Men whose wealth is largely in the form of stocks and bonds are going to other states to live. The head of one corporation which has left the Illinois charter for one in Maine says the Illinois were advised by one lawyer that it was a way to escape the Illinois law. The corporation laws of Maine are patterned after the New Jersey laws and are even more lenient. We have taken similar action in other states in which we hold charters, the main object being to get the best possible conditions and to nationalize and unify our legislation. —Chicago News Letter.

HOLIDAY HOTEL THEFTS.

Visitors to Switzerland Lose Over $60,000 Stolen by International Gang.

In Scotland and considerable property in Devonshire. He refuses, however, to live on either estate, and spends his time wandering about the world as sailor, engineer, explorer, or in any other capacity that presents itself.

Many of the most remarkable stories of submerged "varsity men" will never be written, for the simple reason that they are known to none but the subjects of them, and will consequently die with their miserable possessors. —Answers.

The thefts of property to the value of $24,000 in the Lausanne-Berne express, and $10,000 from Princess Gazarina at St. Moritz.

Other robberies were those of $4,000 from an Italian countess, $1,000 from Princess Blenckner at St. Moritz, and lesser amounts from visitors at Geneva, Interlaken, and Basle.

Lady visitors have been the chief victims of the gang, a single member of which has been arrested, despite the efforts of the Swiss police.

The activity of the gang has caused great discontent amongst hotel-keepers and others who depend for their annual harvest on visitors from abroad.
