and mechanician, who constructed the England river, is now living at Port-land (Maine), having attained the age of ninety-one years. He is very eccentric, and for many years lived in a small attic room, which served as office, bed-room and kitchen. He often boasted that his entire expense for living did not exceed fifty dollars a year, and those best acquainted with his frugal habits and his mode of living were quite willing to believe him.

but it is an accomplished fact in a London music hall. One Mr. Forest and his sons performed on a tight rope while playing on violins, and they wound up by a series of somersets, each playing a fiddle, without missing a note, during his performance. The spectacle of an orchestra performing a symphony by Beethoven, keeping time with the conductor's baten, in a series of jumps and somersets, would be sure to attract
