ous and censurable course manifested a great and wicked desire to excite hostilities with and towards the Indians, even the most peaceable of them, if it could possibly be done.

It is but adding insult to injury to charge the "Mormons" with being the inciting cause of these Indian scare sensations, and it becomes every member of the press. who has had any hand in spreading such an impression, to acknowledge his fault, own himself either deceived or a deceiver, and sincerely ask the pardon of the people whom he has thus wronged, slandered, and libelled.

The several fierce and furious threats made towards the "Mormon"people were still more disingenuous, they were absolutely brutal, as most of them were of a nature to needlessly irritate the prejudiced and lawless portion of the community and incite them to acts of reckless violence and bloody extermination. Such threatenings in the public journals are utterly inexcusable, and they deserve the severest reprobation.
