EVENING NEWS.

Monday, - - June 9, 1875.

Matrimonial Advertisements.

WOOING "COUSIN CARRIE."

I kept the appointment made in answer number four, and the lady a well preserved matron about forty years of age. Addressing her as "Cousin Carrie," as she arose and accompanied me to a ladies' restaurant, a few blocks away, where, over oysters and other refreshments, we had a very free conversation, "Cousin Carrie" expressing her pleasure at the acquaintance, and her desire to have a confidential talk.

"But my dear madam," said I, "what if I like yourself am married; you surely do not wish to bear confidential relations with a married gentleman, when there are so many young and handsome men who would only be too glad to seek the relation you wish?"

"There is where you are in error. A married man can always be trusted in intrigue, when a single man can not. A married man will not compromise himself by divulging his love affairs, while the bachelor delights to boast of his conquests. But tell me, truly, sir, are you really married?"

"I am, madam, and better than that, I am a father. Here is the picture of my first born."

"Well, really, I like your candor; and now since you show me I can confide in you, I will tell you more of myself. I have two children; my eldest daughter is now, at sixteen years, about graduating at Rutger's College. This is my true name (drawing out her card case), and there is no doubt of my respectability. Do you know Mr. ——, one of the proprietors of the —— Hotel?"

The hotel she named is one of the largest in the city, and I suspected what was coming. I replied:

"I am not acquainted with him, but I have seen him."

"Then you have seen my husband. I am his wife! And here (opening her watch and exhibiting the case) is his picture. Are you satisfied of my respectability, now?"

I was indeed surprised at the confidence reposed in me on so short an acquaintance, and for a moment hesitated what to say.

"You do not seem pleased to know this, sir. Pardon me; I yearn so for a dear, warm-hearted male confidant. I may have been imprudent, but I know you will not expose me if you decline my friendship."

"Your secret is safe; rest easy on that score; but tell me, madame, do you live in the hotel?"

"Oh, no, my husband stays there most of the time, while the girls and I live at our private residence in —— avenue, in the winter. In the summer we usually go to the mountains. My husband neglects me. While he provides princely for us, he scarcely spends a night at home, and we rarely see him except when we run over to the hotel. Indeed, I fear he has some lady in the house who has weaned him from home."

"But think a moment at the danger of me visiting you at your residence. If we enter into this confidential friendship we must meet often, and your daughters would suspect something wrong."

"That is very true. We would have to exercise great caution; but I have a plan to suggest."

"And what may it be?"

"I could have you call as my family physician. The servants would suspect no wrong."

"But I'm not a physician."

"But you can be one to please me, can you not?"

"I might, but how could you arrange it?"

"Very easily. You can rent an office, and put out a sign as a physician. Whenever I am indisposed I can send a servant for 'Dr. Worley.' I suspect you will be called often to prescribe for me."

"That is indeed an ingenious device," I said; "but—but—"

"Never mind, I know what you would say. It is the rent. I'll attend to that. I have an ample income of my own, and a young doctor who has only one patient should make that patient pay his rent."

This was uttered with a fascinating smile, and I again attempted to speak.

"It is not the rent; I fear you will be detected."

"Nonsense, nonsense, if that is all, trust me for that. I fear you think me too old. You will find that I am as young as many at twenty."

I did think so, but I dared not confess my feelings. I had to dissemble in the presence of this haughty woman, who arose, closed the door, and, reaching up, placed her arms about my neck and kissed me passionately, remarking, I can't not bear your hesitation. Come, say we shall be friends."

"So let it be," I said, as I quietly disengaged her arms from my neck. "Be careful; the waiter will be in with my bill, as I have called for it."

She withdrew her arms none too soon, for the door was pushed open by the waiter, who returned.

We at once left, and as we proceeded leisurely through East Thirty-fourth street, she made me promise that I would at once rent an office. Giving her my address as "Dr. W. H. Willandar," we separated, with the understanding that I was to write to her the moment I secured an office. The next day I received a note inclosing a check for fifty dollars.

DEAR FRIEND—I hope you have secured the office, as I am ailing and desire to call my physician at once. You will find check enclosed to pay rent for first month, and I will attend to that part regularly.

COUSIN CARRIE.

I returned the check with the letter informing this anxious invalid that I would prefer not venturing upon the practice of medicine until I was assured of more than one patient. Two weeks after I saw my patient partaking of the Communion in a fashionable up-town church.

"FIDELITY," THE FEMALE FRAUD.

I complied with the request of this correspondent, and sent the photograph. Several letters passed, and finally the ladies' parlor of one of the leading hotels as the place of interview. It was 4 p.m. when I took a seat beside her and listened to a glowing description of her social standing, her wealth and prospects. She mentioned glibly the names of a number of well-known ladies in metropolitan society as her friends, and minutely inquired into my income. I had prepared, with the connivance of a well-known lawyer, a receipt, in which he acknowledged receiving for investment for me $208,000 in cash, and this I exhibited with pride to the widow, who was certainly very prepossessing, if not fascinating, in form and feature. After much hesitancy and assumed concern, she stated that she was the daughter of a prominent physician, whose name she gave, but she could not consent to receive me at her home. We parted, after another interview had been set for the following evening.

Rocky Mountain Pills,
A VALUABLE MEDICINE,
From New and Rare Medicinal Plants recently discovered in the Rocky Mountains!
PURELY VEGETABLE.
FIFTEEN years of earnest botanical research among these mountains and valleys have resulted in the discovery, not only of many new varieties of plants, but of new species, some of which possess powerful medicinal curative properties. By continued experiment their virtues have become known—and thus from extracts of these newly discovered plants are these pills compounded.
If properly used, they will cure very many diseases, pains and aches, and prove especially valuable in DYSPEPSIA, LIVER COMPLAINT, INDIGESTION, JAUNDICE, and all cases of FEVER and AGUE, URINARY and KIDNEY TROUBLES, RHEUMATISM, CONSTIPATION, HEARTBURN, DIARRHŒA, PILES, HEADACHES, &c. For females they are invaluable, and for nightly use in cases of BILIOUSNESS and DISORDERED STOMACH.
On orders accompanied by the cash or postal order, I will send safely by mail, postpaid, 1 box Pills for $1; assort 4 dozen boxes, $3.50; 1 gross boxes, $10.00.
